MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Lorraine Begonia.

This is the season that Begonia Gloire de Lorraine is making its fastest growth, and most of the plants will be improved by stopping or pinching the leading shoots. Here is where you will get excellent material for propagating your next year's plants, and now is the time to do it.

I am aware that several of the most successful growers of this fine begonia will not agree with the method I advocate. They adopt the propagation plan of rooting the leaf stalks in November and December, when there is some heat in the sand. Still, after watching the great success attained by two or three growers of my home city, I must lean toward rooting the tops of the young growths, because I believe a larger percentage can be rooted. In cutting off the tip of the shoot, cut just below the fully developed leaf, and insert the cutting an inch deep in the sand. The cutting needs no trimming of any kind. Now I ought to say here that two or three eyes of the rest of the cutting, which is really a flowering shoot and will soon develop flowers, are not of the slightest use to the future plant, and as soon as the young growths which start from the roots appear this little flowering piece can be pinched off close to the surface of the soil. You then have virtually the same plant you would have from a leaf cutting, but the few extra leaves and stem have hastened the rooting process.

The treatment of these rooted cuttings differs little from that of the leaf cuttings. They should be potted in a mixture of half sand and half light loam, should be shaded for a week or two from bright sun, and watered only when really dry. You can not with success water these young begonias as you can a batch of geraniums or chrysanthemums. Some may need water, others may not, and for the dark days of winter keep them always on the dry side.

The returning influence of spring starts the young growths into activity. A shift into a 4-inch pot in April or May and, as Mr. Peterson pleasantly puts it, "your trouble is over." It is in the early days of its existence that this begonia is difficult to handle. For two years after its introduction to this country its culture was understood only by a few. Those few have taught others, and when once mastered it is, like many other things, quite easy after you know how. Every honest gardener will admit that there are many points or operations in our business, that he may consider so simple today, that one day he considered a Chinese puzzle, and deplored the want of familiarity with the subject.

Early Frosts.

It seems out of place to refer to frost after the long, beautiful summer that has blessed us, but although September in the north is our loveliest month, it is fickle, and along about September 20 we often get a frost that wilts such susceptible plants as the dahlia and the heliotrope. We can't do everything in one day, so what can be done to advantage today never put off till tomorrow.

Stevia.

I trust you have your bouvardias lifted and on the bench a week ago; if not, don't delay a day. Another plant that is cheap and common, but most useful, is Stevia serrata, better known as sweet stevia. It should be lifted and potted. It is much too early to bring these plants into the greenhouse because the longer you can keep them outdoors the stouter and better the spikes will be, and what is of more consequence, it will retard them so that they are in their prime at the holidays.

After potting firmly in 6-inch, 7-inch or 8-inch pots, as the plants may require, and giving them the usual soaking, place them on the north side of some sheltering fence or building. Although delighting in a low temperature, this plant is easily hurt by a light frost; if potted, they easily can be laid down and protected, and then may be safe outdoors for another six weeks, greatly to their benefit.

Vinca Major.

If you are well supplied with that most useful drooping plant, Vinca major, both variegated and the green form, you may not need to propagate any this fall. If you must have more, then divisions of the old plants will give you them. Propagate now, for I have never seen the time when any of us had too many of these unequalled drooping plants for vases and veranda-boxes. They root readily now. Cut the long growths up in pieces of two eyes. Don't use the heavy, hard wood near the old plant, or the tender tops. It is necessary to have an eye or joint in the sand, because it is from the root that the strong growths which make the useful plant will spring. Although the growth from the root may not occur till February, keep the cutting wet and shade from bright sun, and they will surely root, although it may be slowly.

Deutzias.

If you grow your own deutzias for spring forcing, they can be dug and potted now, and there will be plenty of time for them to get rooted and established before winter. They will force much better than dormant plants that you pot only just before you begin to force, and which cannot have many roots to supply the leaves and flowers. Lift with all the roots you can, pot firmly, water thoroughly and keep sprayed for a week. They will soon take hold of the new soil.

Hydrangeas.

I noticed in my travels that some successful hydrangea growers were lifting fine plants in 6-inch pots from the frames, where they had been plunged and were growing vigorously. If kept plunged and moist growth had continued, when frost necessitated removal to the greenhouse the wood and eyes would have been unripe and in poor condition to take a rest. The object of lifting them and exposing them to more light and air, as well as less moisture at the roots, was to arrest growth and ripen the wood and flowering buds. If your hydrangeas are crowded and still growing fast, stop the growth by this means.

Pansies.

Pansies sown in July will be about ready to plant out in the beds where they are to winter. The longer and better they are rooted, the more fit will they be to stand the rigor of our hard winters. They can be planted four inches each way, but five inches is better. Plant firmly and water thoroughly, and you will have fine little flowering plants before real winter sets all vegetation hibernating.

Rambler Roses.

I notice a batch of Dorothy Perkins ramblers that have been grown in 6-inch pots all summer in the houses. You may have this variety or some other of those fine ramblers in the same condition. They should by this time have made all the growth you desire, and it is now time the canes should be ripened.

Stand them outdoors, not on the damp ground, or where water will stand, but on boards, because you want them to ripen their wood. Don't suddenly dry them off, but give less water at the root each succeeding week. In October it will pay, in case of heavy rains and warm temperature, to lay these plants on their side, for, if the canes are ripe, the eyes will often break and make a short lateral growth. It is these eyes that you want to be large and plump and dormant when you begin to force in January.

These ramblers will do outdoors until at least November 1, and later if the weather is mild, or till you expect very severe frosts. From the time of protecting them till you begin to force, they should be laid down in a frame, covered with a few inches of straw, and cover the frame with boards when putting the plants away for their winter rest. Give the roots a watering. As I have often had occasion to remark, no hardy trees or shrubs will endure severe frosts when their roots are dry; we have often suffered loss by exposing hardy shrubs to severe frosts with the roots dry.

I had a good deal to say last February about these ramblers and believed then that we had mastered the art of forcing and flowering the Crimson Ramblers, with plants dug from the field in November.

They were dug about November 10, potted, laid down outdoors and covered with four inches of light soil. When brought into a night temperature at the end of January, they were laid on the bench and covered with three or four inches of damp straw from bottom to top. They broke splendidly, every eye bursting out with vigorous growth, and we could see dollar bills sticking all over them. As Easter approached, we looked for trusses of flowers, but to our dismay nearly every lateral growth was blind. Now why was this? October and the early part of November had been mild, and hurried growth had continued; the wood of these ramblers was green and unripe, and the canes had formed no embryo flower buds.

You cannot fail to flower these pot-grown ramblers, but with the fall-dug plants it is a gamble, like many other of our operations. WILLIAM SCOTT.

PRICE OF PALMS.

Those florists who are not closely in touch with the market should note that the price of palms at wholesale is advancing and they should, therefore, advance their retail prices. The first advance in palms was in the European markets, where prices have increased materially. The large growers in this country are asking $1.50 for the kentias they sold at $1.25 last summer, and all along the line the advance has been in about that proportion, with a prospect that prices will go still higher, for there are no stocks in this country which are not sure of a sale during the approaching season, and stocks are so depleted in European centers, especially in Belgium, whence most imported palms have come, that it is not possible to import good plants profitably at the present prices in this country.

CANADIAN

A BANNER MEETING.

The ninth annual convention of the Canadian Horticultural Association was held in the gymnasium of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, on August 29 and 30, and was, in point of attendance and interest taken, one of the best conventions the association ever has had. The attendance from the east was particularly good. The Maritime Province sent two representatives, and Montreal and Ottawa sent large contingents. Winnipeg had one representative, and as might be expected, Toronto, Hamilton, London and all the smaller western points had practically their full complement of florists at the convention.

President William Fendley, of Brampton, called the convention to order punctually on time at 2 o'clock on Wednesday. An address of welcome was given on behalf of the Guelph gardeners and florists and the Ontario Agricultural College by Prof. J. B. Reynolds, who took the place of President Creelman of the college, who was unfortunately unable to attend on account of the death of his brother. This was responded to by A. C. Wilshire, Montreal, who graciously thanked the professor for his kind words of welcome, and said the boys hoped to put in a couple of days both pleasantly and profitably.

The secretary's report showed a membership well spread over Canada. The treasurer's report showed the finances in a healthy condition.

Trade Exhibit.

The trade exhibit judges were E. I. Mepsted, George A. Robinson and Thomas Manton. The trade exhibit was not so large as in former years, but the collection of ferns, palms, etc., was good. J. Gammage & Sons showed a fine bench of mixed plants. A certificate of merit was awarded to J. Campbell, of Simcoe, for a new light gladiolus called Peace. This is certainly a fine thing, and will have a good commercial run, as the color is good. D. Mitchell, of Fergus, Ont., was awarded a certificate of merit for a collection of pressed ferns mounted. This included about thirty-five specimens and was certainly interesting. The Arnott Chemical Co., of Toronto, exhibited plant foods. The Foster Pottery Co. and John Cranstoun & Son, of Hamilton, exhibited flower pots. The Morehead return steam trap was on exhibition. Blackie Bros., of Halifax, had an exhibit of Campbell's fertilizers and insecticides, sulphur vaporizers, etc. Mr. Blackie gave a practical demonstration in the greenhouse with the sulphur vaporizer, which was highly commended by all who saw it working.

mercial Carnations," by John Morgan, of Hamilton, brought out a spirited discussion.

On the second day the first paper in the morning session was by J. H. Dunlop, of Toronto, on "Roses and their Special Requirements." This was instructive, as it not only dealt with the requirements of roses in general, but gave some practical pointers on special varieties, and gave Mr. Dunlop's experience with a number of greenfly and mildew preventatives. A paper on "Greenhouse Insect Pests," by Prof. T. D. Jarvis, gave some practical pointers on the best way to keep down a number of the insects that infest greenhouses. He invited any florists who wished to send specimens, with samples of plants affected by any insects working in their greenhouse, and the college experts would be only too pleased to classify the pests, and give their experience as to the best way of combating them. R. W. King, gave a paper on "What is the Best System of Heating a Greenhouse 21x150 Feet?" On review of the general advance in the heating system of greenhouses, the consensus of opinion was in favor of steam. George Vair, of the Normal School Gardens, Toronto, gave a paper on "Confifers."

Perhaps one of the most interesting and one that brought out as much discussion as any was a paper given by W. C. Hall, of Montreal, on "Business

W. J. Lawrence.

(President-elect Canadian Horticultural Association.)

Subjects Discussed.

The paper on "Fertilizers, their Use and Nature," by Prof. Robert Harcourt, was instructive, and took up thoroughly the scientific part of using fertilizers, which is unfortunately not as closely studied by the average florist as it should be. An essay on "Com-

Pointers for the Retail Trade." This paper showed how many retail men take a lively interest in the work of the association, and Mr. Hall's paper gave them all a chance to express their opinions. One of the strong points was Mr. Hall's urgent plea for cleanliness in retail stores. In this connection it gave some of the other retail men a chance to give the wholesale growers of plants a pointer on washing the pots before delivering plants to the stores. The mixing of colors in store windows was also taken up, and strong criticisms were made on the way some florists mix together everything they have in their store, and use all colors to make a window display.

Social Features.

On Thursday afternoon the members and friends of the association were entertained by the Guelph Horticultural Society on the college lawn. An orchestra was in attendance, and a first-class luncheon was served. The members of the society had a chance to test the quality of the cream produced at the college. W. J. Lawrence gave a couple of songs which were well received. J. H. Dunlop took the chair, and after proposing a number of toasts, which were replied to by prominent gentlemen from Guelph and members of the association, he called upon William Gammage, who in a short but pleasing address presented William Fendley, the retiring president, with a cut glass fruit dish, sugar bowl, and cream pitcher.

Election of Officers.

At the evening session the election of officers took place, and resulted as follows: President, W. J. Lawrence, Toronto; first vice-president, John Walsh, Montreal; second vice-president, E. Dale, Brampton; treasurer, Herman Simmers, Toronto; secretary, A. H. Ewing, Woodstock. The executive committee comprises nine members, three retiring each year, as follows: One year, A. Pino-teau, E. Annandale, W. Taylor; two years, J. Suckling, J. Eddy, J. Campbell; three years, W. Kehoe, A. G. Stevens, F. Dicks.

The next place of meeting was decided to be London, Ont. The convention dissolved after singing "Auld Lang Syne" and "God Save the King." A noticeable feature this year was the number of ladies present. D. J.

W. J. LAWRENCE.

W. J. Lawrence, of Toronto, the president-elect of the Canadian Horticultural Association, was born in Toronto, in 1866, and has been in the florist's business since 1880. He served his apprenticeship at the private establishment of the late Sir D. L. Macpherson, under George Vair. In 1885 he went to Hamilton, and for two years was in the employ of F. G. Foster. Returning to Toronto, he took charge of the store for the James Fleming estate. He was also with Grainger Bros., Deer Park, for a short time.

In 1894 he took the foremanship of the greenhouses of J. H. Dunlop. This position he held for four years, leaving to go into business for himself. Mr. Lawrence is a tenor singer of considerable ability, taking part in many leading concerts. He is also councilman in the city where he resides. D. J.

ASPARAGUS.

What is the nature of Asparagus myriocladus? I have a large plant of it in a 12-inch pot and want to grow a quantity of it. Can it be propagated by means of cuttings, and when and how should it be done? E. L. K.

We must confess we do not know the species referred to. As far as we are aware, there is no asparagus that can be propagated by cuttings, but all of them are easily and readily propagated from seed. Division of the roots is another method of propagation, but much slower and more expensive than seed. Encourage your old plant to make a strong growth, and flower and fruit will follow. It would be interesting if you would tell us if this asparagus was valuable as an ornamental plant. W. S.

A NEW ASTER.

Another new and fine aster has made its appearance on the Chicago cut flower market, where it is handled by E. C. Amling, and will, in the course of time, find its way into other cut flower centers and into the seed catalogues, for both the grower and Mr. Amling feel sure that it is the coming aster, so far as late varieties are concerned.

The new aster originated eight years ago in the private garden of G. S. Crego, at Maywood, Ill., and is evidently a combination of the best qualities of the highest grade asters grown at that time, the Comet blood being apparent in the form of the flower. The original plant came from a small planting of home-grown seed, and produced four extra large white blossoms. The seed was carefully sown the following season and a small percentage of the plants came true to the new type, the balance being destroyed. This rule has been systematically followed each year until Mr. Crego thinks the new form has been fully fixed. He says the flowers come as true as in any of the older sorts.

The blooms are unusually large, those photographed being three and one-half inches to four inches across in their natural position; if extended to get the measurement of the full length of petal the diameter is frequently four and a half inches, or even more.

In ordinarily favorable seasons, the flowers are borne on long, stiff stems, and are of a beautiful fluffy and unconventional form, closely resembling the early mums. At present the stock is in three colors, shell pink, pure white and dark pink.

The Crego aster is still in the hands of the originator, but it is probable that the seed will be offered to the trade next year, as it is understood that this year's crop will yield a considerable harvest.

STRENGTHS OF CYANIDE.

I read with considerable interest the article recently written by that past master of horticulture, W. S., giving directions for using potassium cyanide for fumigation.

I notice an omission, however, in his article, and, by the way, not in his alone, but in every other article on this subject that I have read, which seems to me serious enough to account for the failures and injury to plants which so many have experienced in its use.

I refer to the great variation in the strength of the potassium cyanide found in commerce. The commercial article is listed in various strengths from thirty per cent to sixty per cent, and even a little higher, while the chemically pure can be obtained containing ninety-nine per cent.

In view of these facts it is readily apparent to any one that should W. S. have used that containing, say, sixty per cent and found it successful, any one else happening to get the thirty per cent and using the quantity recommended by W. S., would get so little gas that it would likely be a complete failure.

If, on the other hand, W. S. should have used the thirty per cent and some one who followed his directions had happened to get a sixty per cent strength, the quantity of gas would likely be large enough to cause the injury to plants which many report.

I have obtained a supply of the ninety-nine per cent pure, and will in the fall, after the houses are closed up, conduct some careful experiments with it, and will gladly report the results through the columns of the REVIEW for the benefit of all.

The ninety-nine per cent cyanide is much more expensive than the ordinary grades, but I believe the smaller amount necessary to do the work, and the comparatively uniform results which will likely attend its use, will more than offset the difference in price.

I also believe that the amount of sulphuric acid recommended by most writers is far in excess of the amount actually required. Theoretically it only requires about one-fifth as much, to affect the decomposition of the cyanide, as most directions call for.

I am surprised that the scientific men in our experiment stations have not called attention to the variation in strength in the cyanide. Some of them may have, but I have not been fortunate enough to have seen the accounts.

THE RETAIL

FLORIST.....

BIRTHDAY BOUQUETS.

Vincent I. Gorley, of St. Louis, believes the birthday bouquet deserves a boost. In a little printed slip distributed at the Dayton convention he says:

"Every hustling retail florist ought to use his energy and push the birthday bouquet—help make it a fad. Just think of how many more flowers would be sold the year around in every large city if the sending of birthday bouquets became a more general custom. Take, for instance, St. Louis with 700,000 population. Out of that number about 400,000 would be eligible to receive birthday bouquets. Suppose that 50,000 would buy only $1 worth, which would be the smallest amount; there would be spent $50,000 a year more for flowers in St. Louis, and every florist would be greatly benefited thereby.

"It's up to the hustling retail florist to develop every branch of the business to its utmost and this is surely a big field to work in. Why are so many flowers bought for the dead? It has become a custom. So let it be with the birthday bouquet. Its promotion would make two hearts happy; the one who receives the flowers and the good, old florist that sells them."

The birthday bouquet certainly is worthy every assistance on its way to popularity, for in it there lie possibilities far beyond those indicated in Mr. Gorley's modest statement.

A NOVEL WEDDING DECORATION.

The illustration on page 987 demonstrates what skill and enterprise can accomplish in decorative work. This immense tent, in which was held the Wilson-Slayback wedding, at Glen Ridge, N. J., June 30, was transformed in its entirety—100 feet long by fifty wide—into a great "church." The semblance to a tent was entirely obliterated. The artificial rafters were covered with oak-colored burlap to produce the wood effect, and the rear pillars were the same. Pin-oak branches and lyrata were used to form the roof, and green canvas covered the floor. In the background, the alcove was banked with lilies, blue hydrangeas, foliage plants and palms. The sides of the church were banked with palms, lilies and white bouvardia. The home of the bride was decorated with asparagus, marguerites and blue hydrangeas. Three hundred fifty strings of asparagus were used in the house alone.

The work on this excellent decoration was done by William Donohoe, of New York. Under Mr. Donohoe's supervision it required eight men two days to complete it. The whole tent was covered with mosquito netting, 1,200 yards being used—a tribute to the far-famed Jersey mosquitoes.

After the wedding ceremony the chancel posts and rails were removed and the immense room was set with forty-seven tables, decorated with sweet peas and maidenhair in bonnet baskets, used afterward for favors. The whole decoration was most unique, and was a credit to the originality of Mr. Donohoe.

A FLORIFEROUS AURATUM.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of a Lilium auratum grown in a pot from a 7x9 bulb. This appears to us as being unusual to have an auratum, especially that size of bulb, produce a stem bearing thirty-three flowers. Although the flowers were not nearly so large as the general stock of auratum coming into this market, yet the great number of flowers produced on a single stalk made it a very effective and attractive plant. This plant was sent in by H. Macherey.

Seasonable Suggestions.

With the cold, foggy nights and warm days which we may expect during this and the next month, we enter on the most critical season for the grower. To keep the stock in good shape and get the leaves and young growth sufficiently hardened, in proper condition to withstand the change from natural to artificial heat, without impairing their vitality, requires the best of skill and care, with the best judgment we possess.

Plants at this season, owing to diminishing sunshine and decreasing evaporation, get sluggish in their root action and cannot use either so much water or food as during the growing season. They show a natural tendency to take a rest.

The greenhouse provides us with the means partially to control conditions, such as the regulation of temperature and moisture, and the access of fresh air, and if we seriously study how to regulate these conditions to suit the requirements of the plants, we are able to carry them through this critical period without any injurious effects.

To enable us to exercise sound judgment in this matter, the benches should be examined thoroughly every morning and all dry spots gone over previous to the general watering. Those parts of the bench which are in close proximity to the pipes will require careful attention, and especially is this the case where the pipes are under the benches, as they will now be receiving heat from the bottom as well as from the surface. It is wise to make sure that the whole body of soil is equally moist.

By keeping a close watch on these conditions, and giving proper attention to ventilation, the stock can be put into condition for the dark winter weather, with sufficient vitality to keep up a splendid and profitable cut during the season.

CANADIAN HORTICULTURE.

[The address of President Wm. Fendley in opening the convention of the Canadian Horticultural Association, at Guelph, Ont., August 29, 1906.]

It gives me much pleasure to preside at this, our ninth annual convention, and if, in trying to convey to you a few hints on trade in general, any person should feel benefited thereby, I shall feel more than repaid. I want every member to ask questions on any subject that may come up, and not let it drop until he thoroughly understands it. In this way he will feel paid for his trouble in attending this meeting. I often have thought that formerly subjects were hurried too fast. Pardon me if I am wrong, as I want every one to feel benefited by this convention.

Ways to Improve Business.

I think the florists' trade in this country is still in its infancy, and by carefully educating the people of this great country of ours we are making money ourselves. To teach the people, fill every available space around your premises with some kind of flowers, and the public in general will take notice. Keep clean from weeds. Do not think that when you send two or three men out to hoe in these places that it is money thrown away, for it is not. It will all come back some day. I well know the seasons are short, and a great many greenhouse men are too busy to take up this. They say there is no money in it, but the more we beautify this country the more amateurs will want to follow in our steps. It is the duty of every florist to attend as many conventions as possible, also as many flower shows as he can, for surely he will learn something. It may not be much, but it will pay you. I am talking from personal experience. I have attended conventions when my neighbors have said they were too busy, and have stayed at home, and I can say honestly that I never have regretted attending one of them, for I have seen new introductions, and heard up-to-date ideas, and have come home well repaid for my trip.

Just a word or two to the private gardeners and park managers. In making grounds of beauty you are helping on a glorious work. We want to hear from you, and get hints along these lines. There is no florist who does not like to look over well kept grounds.

Some Pertinent Questions.

I should like to submit a few questions:

1. Could we not have a telegraph code, to be used by the whole trade in general, and that to be printed in the trade paper?
2. Could we not get the standing of every florist in business, and not send goods C. O. D. to unknown parties, as it hurts their feelings?
3. What about the trade paper, what has it done for you, how do you like it, has any one anything to say against it? This is the place to make it right.

Membership.

Now I could go on in this way and tire you. This I do not want to do. I want to see the membership increased. By this method all of us will learn more, and no man can learn too much. I hope every one of you will have a good time; and let us hear from you during the sessions. Do not leave it to three or four to do all the talking. This applies especially to new members.

Now in conclusion I want to say, please be on hand at every session. Do not come in when a session is half over, and say that you missed this or that part.

To make this a record-breaker is to stay together. There will be lots of time to see the sights of this royal city between sessions.

BONE MEAL FOR FERNS.

We have a house of Scottii planted out on the benches. Would you kindly tell me if dusting bone flour over the soil is beneficial or not? We are feeding with liquid cow manure. Should I use bone in the soil when potting them up in the fall? H. C. O.

A dusting of bone flour on the surface of the soil between the plants will be beneficial; also in the compost you use for potting. You can add one quart of bone dust to every bushel of loam on the bed. It should be lightly worked into the soil of the bench. In the compost for potting it should be thoroughly mixed with the loam. The only danger with this excellent fertilizer is in allowing the soil to become dry. Moisture dissolves the bone flour or dust, but dryness allows it to ferment and burn the roots.

Used with discretion, it is our most valuable chemical stimulant for vegetable growth. This is not difficult to understand. The whole surface of the earth is filled with the blood and bones of countless generations who have lived, flourished and passed again to Mother Earth. We cannot put our feet down on the ground unless we press on the remains of a race gone before. This would be true even if confined to what is known as the human family. How much truer is it if we consider the innumerable beings called lower animals who have lived, breathed, been happy and died to enrich the earth for future and more perfect beings. The saddest fact connected with bone that I remember was that a ship took to Liverpool 1,100 tons of bones for the British farmers to use in raising turnips. They were the bones of Turkish and Russian soldiers who fell in the battle of Plevna in the Balkan campaign. W. S.

across, one on each side of each row of plants, tied to the outside wires. When these wires are drawn tight and supported about every twenty feet by wooden cross-pieces, this makes as effective a support as any one could ask for.

Some growers use a wire ring support to hold up the body of the plant, and the wire and string method to hold up the blooming stems. They argue that you can get to the middle of the bunch so much better to weed and work the soil, but we find that if the plants are thoroughly cleaned and the beds are weeded and mulched before the supports are put in place, very little work is needed by the soil until toward spring. We also know that when a ring support is used for the body of the plant it takes much more work to keep the plants in the ring than the other method does, especially if they are large.

COMMERCIAL CARNATIONS.

[A paper by John Morgan, of Hamilton, Ont., read before the Canadian Horticultural Association, at Guelph, August 30.]

Commercial carnations and their culture is a subject that has been dealt with a great deal by the different trade papers, and what I have to say may possibly be a repetition of what you have already read, but most of the papers on this subject have been chiefly for the benefit of the large grower, and my remarks are intended chiefly for the small grower. I, myself, am a small grower, and can only give you my experience as such.

Small Growers Should Have Few Varieties.

One of the greatest mistakes a small grower makes is in attempting to grow too many varieties; seven or eight varieties are ample for the average florist. It is well known that different varieties require different treatment, and the fewer varieties you bother with the better, providing you have a range of color. Find out which varieties you can grow best, and then stick to them until you are positive there is something better. I do not mean never to try any new variety; by all means try a few of one or two new varieties each year, but do not spend all your profits in buying new varieties, for instead of getting a gold mine, which one would almost expect to get from the description, in most cases you get what is commonly known as a gold brick; the outside or description is very glittering, but the article itself is a fraud and imposition.

Most Profitable Varieties.

The list of varieties I have found most

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Supporting the Plants.

You will be wanting to support your carnation plants soon, before they begin to lie over from their own weight. I presume you have finished taking off all the bad foliage and cleaned up generally, and applied that light mulch I mentioned some weeks ago. If you have not done these things, and if you intend to do them, it will pay you to get them done before you put in place your supports. You can work so much freer and faster. Most varieties will need supports only to hold the body of the plants erect for the present. The blooms are not heavy as yet, and the stems will hold them off the soil if the plant is held upright.

What kind of supports to use is the next question, and you can take your choice of a large variety of devices especially made for this purpose. Some of them show great ingenuity on the part of the inventor, and while one make may be fancied by one grower, another grower may prefer another make. Each has its own peculiar feature, but any one of several styles will answer the purpose admirably. For the retail grower who grows a variety of plants, and may find it necessary to pull up a part of a bench at any time before the season is ended, these wire supports are the proper thing. There are no wires to bother with over the benches, interfering with the work or in the way of tall plants. Don't think you can save money by inventing one of your own and making it for your own use. Those that are on the market are made by machines and are sold cheaper than you can make them. They will last a number of years and will pay for themselves handsomely.

To the large grower who plants house after house of carnations, and seldom less than a whole bench of one variety, these wire supports are not so indispensable. In fact, we prefer the method we have been using for a number of years. This is simply to run a wire between each row of plants and along the edge of the bench about the middle of the body of the plants, and tie run strings profitable are: in light pink, Enchantress and Fair Maid; in dark pink, Mrs. Lawson; some growers are superseding this with Nelson Fisher, but so far this variety has not proved so profitable with me as Lawson; in scarlet, Estelle is still the best with me. Red Lawson is a good one to grow, but cannot be called a scarlet, and the color is objected to by some. In crimson, Harlowarden is the only one I have found worth growing; in white, White Lawson, Queen and Boston Market have proved themselves the best. Lady Bountiful is a nice white, but I do not think it will give you as good returns as the others mentioned. I might mention that Boston Market is the best keeping carnation in commerce, and is also one of the best perfumed. The yellow and variegated classes I do not grow, as I am convinced that for them to be profitable you need to get a fancy price; I notice that the large growers are not growing so many of the fancy varieties as they used to, but are planting more largely of the varieties I have mentioned.

Methods of Growing.

In regard to culture, I believe in propagating early, say in November, for at this time you will have a finer lot of cuttings than at any other time during the season. When your cuttings are rooted, put them in pots or flats, whichever you find most convenient, and grow on in a low temperature, that is, in a violet temperature, and you will have fine, strong plants when the time comes for planting out in the field. It is needless for me to tell you to keep your plants free from weeds, and to keep them well cultivated. August, I find, is the best month for planting in the houses; I have done this in July, but the plants seem to get stunted with the heat. In August, the nights are longer, and they recover much more quickly. I notice one of the largest growers in Chicago has given up planting in July. Do not open your ventilators very wide for two or three days after planting, but syringe every few hours, and your plants will soon go ahead; then give all the air possible, and only syringe to keep down red spider. Do not syringe just for the sake of seeing the water fly, for I am convinced the less you syringe your carnations during the fall and winter months the less disease you will have.

One of the principal things in growing good carnations is to give plenty of fresh air during the winter months; do not nail your ventilators down, as I know one florist did; that poor fellow is out of the business now. Try to open your ventilators every day, even if only for an hour at noon. During the season of heavy firing, the plants are apt to get soft and subject to disease, but fresh air will keep them hardy and in good health, and you will find your bloom will keep much longer than if grown in a stuffy atmosphere.

Carnation Troubles.

Carnations, like other plants, are subject to various diseases, and one of the most dreaded is stem-rot; the starting point of this, I believe, is the propagating bed. I bought two batches of rooted cuttings which any one could see had been left in the sand too long, the bark being quite soft, and as I expected, they had a good dose of stem-rot. They died off in the field, and also on the benches, after planting, but after giving them three heavy applications of air-slaked lime, the disease was entirely stopped. If you are troubled with stem-rot, try the lime cure, and I don't think you will be disappointed.

Now, a few words regarding the bloom. Don't let the flower fully develop before cutting; you may have to sacrifice size, but the public will get more benefit from them. People are beginning to tire of buying sleepy carnations, and will buy other flowers instead, unless we give them blooms that will last at least three or four days.

VIOLETS.

A General Going Over.

How do you find those violets looking now on your return from the S. A. F.? Are they all right, or have they needed a little more care than they received during your absence. Well, be it as it may, it will be perfectly safe and a wise proceeding to go over all the plants carefully at once, noting all the conditions of soil, watering, cultivating, etc., remedying all defects and keeping a sharp eye out for any aphid or other pest, as well as any signs of disease. Any of these should have immediate attention, as delay at this time of the year is worse than it is earlier in the season. They should never be neglected if you expect to attain the results that you wish for, i. e., the best stock and top-notch prices.

Keep close watch of the plants, and do not let them spend their strength in making runners now. Keep them cut off closely, so that they devote all their energies to making big, strong crowns, ready for a good winter's work. As we get cooler nights from now on, they will grow more rapidly than they have been doing during the continued hot summer. They will easily get the start of you in many ways unless you are vigilant.

Of course you looked over the heating system, before planting the house, to see that it was in perfect running order, but it is a good idea to look it over again now, that no little thing was overlooked. When some cold night overtakes you, you want to be able to fire lightly, so be ready.

Caution in Taking Advice.

It is more than likely that you met many friends and fellow florists at Dayton who advised you to do this thing and that, and while all were without doubt sincere in their advice and thought it the best thing you could possibly do, still you should go slowly. There are many reasons why their particular advice may not apply to your houses, and it is much safer to experiment in a limited way, and only lose or injure a small number of plants, than to risk all. If the plan is all right you can proceed with the balance of your stock, or if it is then too late you can do so next season.

I think I can safely say that any grower who has been many years in the business will confirm this advice and can probably recall many instances when he would have been glad if he had done so. I think just now of one time when we tried a small house—we wished it had been even smaller—full of carnations, fertilizing with Albert's Horticultural Manure, and as a result had all our blooms firmly glued together. So again I say, go slowly with all experiments, giving everything a trial, but only a trial, until you have personally proven it to be good. R. E. SHUPHELT.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The market remains under the influence of large receipts, much inferior stock and summer stagnation, and yet there is a spirit of cheerfulness now evident under it all, that indicates the early revival of the cut flower business in all its departments. The wholesalers have all completed their improvements; the stores look bright and attractive. Many of them have been enlarged, modernized, and altogether indications point strongly toward a more than usually prosperous season.

Asters still bother the trade with their abundance and their inferior quality. The fact is, those below the average are entirely unsalable. It is far better for growers to keep such worthless stuff away from the market altogether. There are plenty of gladioli every day, and prices are at the bottom. Hydrangeas are showing the effects of the dry, hot spell. Tritomas are adding to the effectiveness demand. Plenty of lilies, especially speciosum. Longiflorum sells at $8 per hundred for the best, and are of the finest quality. Carnations are still scarce and short-stemmed, and roses are slow to regain their quality, length of stem and usual values, though the supply of all varieties, especially American Beauties, is much beyond expectations.

The opening of the schools and theatres, and the return of the summer tourists, are already having an encouraging effect in the volume of business, and at some price everything worth purchasing is gone from the wholesale marts before the close of the day.

September is expected to be the best month of the Newport season. Mrs. Belmont had a large decoration Saturday, which Wadley & Smythe handled, using their New York store assistants in addition to their Newport force. Several society events there in the near future will bring the season up to its usual average. Leikens has had some large engagements.

Fair and Mum Show.

The seventy-fifth annual fair and mum show at the American Institute is announced for November 7 to 9, and the schedule of prizes is attractive. Over $600 goes to the chrysanthemum exhibitors, and a silver cup to the best Mrs. F. F. Thompson, the new variety intro-

The Germans' Fete.

The eighteenth annual horticultural and agricultural exhibition of the Schwabischer Sangerbund, of Brooklyn, began on Sunday, September 2. The weather was perfect and the immense grounds were crowded with thousands of interested visitors. If New York could have a flower show that would draw like this, the problem of self-supporting exhibitions would be solved. The secret seems to be the appeal to the national spirit and the loyalty toward and friendship of the Teutonic people for each other.

Before the week's end 100,000 Germans will attend. The show itself is not extensive, but every exhibit is most creditable.

Among the prominent florists on hand at the start were: Anton Schultheis, of College Point; John Donaldson, of Elmhurst, and O. V. Zangen, of Hoboken, N. J.

The florists in charge of the big affair are: August F. Schrader, Elmhurst, L. I., superintendent horticultural department; John Miesem, secretary, Elmhurst, L. I.; Fred Marquardt, Middle Village, L. I.; Hermann Maenner, Maspeth, L. I.; Chas. E. Koch, Clarkson st., Brooklyn; John Baumann, Jr., Middle Village, L. I.; Henry Bottjen, Elmhurst, L. I., superintendent agricultural department.

Among the premium winners were: John Baumann, Middle Village, carpet bedding, geraniums; John Dreier, Middle Village, cottage garden, carpet bedding; Chas. Koch, Flatbush, geraniums, cannas, coleus, begonias, palms; F. Marquardt, Middle Village, geraniums, salvia, coleus, coxcomb, vinca, cyclamen; August Schrader, Elmhurst, salvias, ficus, beds of foliage plants, conifers; Chas. Trauth, Newark, N. J., begonias; Abe Millar, Jamaica, cannas, cut flowers of hardy stock; Julius Roehrs Co., Rutherford, N. J., group of palms; H. Maenner, Maspeth, group of palms, Boston fern; John Miesem, Elmhurst, Scottii fern, araucarias; Henry A. Dreer, Philadelphia, fine display of water lilies. There was the usual fine showing of vegetables, and F. Marquardt put up the annual column of fruits and vegetables.

Various Notes.

R. Vincent, Jr., & Son announce a visit of inspection to their dahlia fields at White Marsh, Md., on Wednesday, September 19, and expect large delegations from New York and Philadelphia. The 6 a. m. and 8 a. m. trains on the Pennsylvania will stop at Chase station and Mr. Vincent will meet all passengers. An enjoyable visit is anticipated. The Baltimore and Washington boys will be there.

Monday evening, September 10, is the opening night of the fall season of the New York Florists' Club, in the Grand Opera House building. Many matters of interest will be considered, and a large attendance is hoped for.

George Saltford has made an exhaustive canvass of the violet situation lately, visiting about 100 growers in Rhinebeck, Poughkeepsie and vicinity, and covering over fifty miles a day in his automobile. About a million plants testify to the continued enterprise of these growers. Some twenty-five new houses have been built and the output will be as large as ever, though the average quality does not promise so well as in

of the window displays in the retail windows, many of which have not been up to the New York standard lately. Dahlias grow better daily and the cactus varieties command fair prices. Orchids are scarce and values are advancing. Weddings are few, and valley is abundant and in small duced by Charles H. Totty, the Madison expert. The allotments for groups of foliage plants, orchids, pansies, roses, carnations and violets are also attractive. The only menace to a great success is lack of room.

The committee in charge includes C.

1905. There will be no scarcity, however, and the stories of black-rot and gall fly have been exaggerated. Still these pests are much in evidence, and some of the growers have met with serious losses. A few years ago these twenty-five new houses would have supplied the market demands. Now with the growing call and shipments to other cities, every grower can depend on marketing his product profitably, and still there is room.

The flower carnival at Averno last week was a great success. A. Warendorff, who has been ill at the Mt. Sinai hospital, was fortunately convalescent and able to enjoy a little of the triumph his advice and management helped accomplish up in Westchester county.

John D. Rockefeller is erecting a million-dollar mansion, and has contracted for two Italian gardens connected with the terraces in front of it.

The new firm of Gunther Bros. is now established, and the big store at the old stand has been greatly improved and enlarged in anticipation of the natural increase of business during the coming season.

Russin & Hanfling, at 114 West Twenty-eighth street, who make a specialty of wheat sheaves and fancy baskets, have leased the entire three stories and basement at this address, and will utilize it all for florists' supplies. These men have had fifteen years' experience and are building up an excellent business.

John Foley, manager for N. Lecakes & Co., is enjoying a two weeks' vacation with his family at Belmar, N. J.

Michael Ford is back from his outing more vigorous than for years, according to his own estimate of the benefit of Atlantic City air. This will encourage the conventionists who go to Philadelphia next August, as doubtless every one of them will visit this great seaside resort while there, and so escape the heat so liberally dispensed at Dayton.

F. A. Armitage, of Hitchings & Co., is enjoying the ocean breezes at Block Harbor, Me., after a busy season.

Chas. Millang is filling his greenhouse with a fine stock of plants of all kinds. His European importation of retinispora will soon be here.

Alex J. Guttman returned Friday from his two weeks' western trip, much improved in health. He reports fine daily receipts of Victory carnations, and a big demand for plants.

Frank H. Traendly has, among other memories of Dayton, a lively tussle with the worst case of hay fever on record. J. K. Allen brought a good supply of the same thing home with him, but has mastered it. These young men think the heat of the west a worse ordeal than our eastern humidity.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The arrival of dahlias in quantity is the feature of the market marking the advent of autumn, and the probable resumption of floral activity. Every variety of fancy dahlia that made an impression last season—C. W. Bruton, Perle d'Or, Twentieth Century and many others—can be had in quantity at tempting prices. Beauties are selling well at a shade higher prices. Mediums and short grades are, of course, most plentiful. Asters are fine, the better grades, and very cheap in the poorer. There are more asters sold than anything else. Valley, though excellent, has not been in demand. A novelty in the market is the arrival of Easter lilies at W. E. McKissick's. They are very desirable, having one or two flowers only to a stem. The present volume of business exceeds that of last season.

Club Meeting.

A large and enthusiastic meeting of the Florists' Club was held on Tuesday evening. G. C. Watson read an excellent paper on the Dayton convention from a seedsman's standpoint. A number of other addresses were made by those who had attended. John Westcott presented the club with a handsome picture of H. B. Beatty, one of the club's oldest members. Mr. Westcott's address was the most eloquent that even he has ever given.

Nominations for officers were made for the ensuing year as follows: President, Samuel S. Pennock; vice-president, Fred Hohman; secretary, Edwin Lonsdale; treasurer, J. William Colflesh.

The bowling trophies were on exhibition.

Recent Importations.

The latest arrivals in the great warehouses of "the florists' supply house of America" are the French bridal baskets of delicately woven straw. They are of new design, with long handles, graceful, flexible, and in colors exquisitely soft, Alice blue, pale pink, white, cream, yellow and lavender.

Pot covers of delicately woven winter straw in nests of six are beautiful for small to medium size plants, and for favors, for which the smaller sizes are well adapted. A violet mat to be used flat is looped with ribbon harmonizing in color with the flowers it is intended to hold. Phil is indebted to Mr. Berkowitz for a glimpse of this choice stock, just unpacked.

Meritorious Novelties.

THE REVIEW is indebted to both members of the firm of M. Rice & Co. for the opportunity afforded the Philadelphia representative of examining the novelties now on exhibition in their well-appointed show-room, and of listening to a discussion of the wants they are designed to fill. Few of these novelties are accidental, most of them being expressly created to meet some demand of the leading retailers, whose customers require that their floral arrangements shall display cultivation and taste quite as much as their books or their pictures.

The pervading idea in these novelties is best described in Mr. Rice's own words: "They are intended to enhance the beauty of the flowers and plants displayed." Natural bark and twig, deep green and copper or white are preferred. Bright colors are discarded.

One of the prettiest conceptions among these novelties is the revival of the old-fashioned bouquet holder. This revival is due to a demand that was strongly felt last season for the old-fashioned round bouquet such as grandmother carried when she was a girl. To meet this demand all the paper bouquet holders were brought into use. Now the enterprise of Mr. Rice has given us a dainty creation in lace, ribbon and chiffon, white and pale pink or delicate blue, one style suited for round, the other for flat demand. Plenty of lilies, especially speciosum. Longiflorum sells at $8 per hundred for the best, and are of the finest quality. Carnations are still scarce and short-stemmed, and roses are slow to regain their quality, length of stem and usual values, though the supply of all varieties, especially American Beauties, is much beyond expectations.

The opening of the schools and theatres, and the return of the summer tourists, are already having an encouraging effect in the volume of business, and at some price everything worth purchasing is gone from the wholesale marts before the close of the day.

September is expected to be the best month of the Newport season. Mrs. Belmont had a large decoration Saturday, which Wadley & Smythe handled, using their New York store assistants in addition to their Newport force. Several society events there in the near future will bring the season up to its usual average. Leikens has had some large engagements.

Fair and Mum Show.

The seventy-fifth annual fair and mum show at the American Institute is announced for November 7 to 9, and the schedule of prizes is attractive. Over $600 goes to the chrysanthemum exhibitors, and a silver cup to the best Mrs. F. F. Thompson, the new variety intro-

The Germans' Fete.

The eighteenth annual horticultural and agricultural exhibition of the Schwabischer Sangerbund, of Brooklyn, began on Sunday, September 2. The weather was perfect and the immense grounds were crowded with thousands of interested visitors. If New York could have a flower show that would draw like this, the problem of self-supporting exhibitions would be solved. The secret seems to be the appeal to the national spirit and the loyalty toward and friendship of the Teutonic people for each other.

Before the week's end 100,000 Germans will attend. The show itself is not extensive, but every exhibit is most creditable.

Among the prominent florists on hand at the start were: Anton Schultheis, of College Point; John Donaldson, of Elmhurst, and O. V. Zangen, of Hoboken, N. J.

The florists in charge of the big affair are: August F. Schrader, Elmhurst, L. I., superintendent horticultural department; John Miesem, secretary, Elmhurst, L. I.; Fred Marquardt, Middle Village, L. I.; Hermann Maenner, Maspeth, L. I.; Chas. E. Koch, Clarkson st., Brooklyn; John Baumann, Jr., Middle Village, L. I.; Henry Bottjen, Elmhurst, L. I., superintendent agricultural department.

Among the premium winners were: John Baumann, Middle Village, carpet bedding, geraniums; John Dreier, Middle Village, cottage garden, carpet bedding; Chas. Koch, Flatbush, geraniums, cannas, coleus, begonias, palms; F. Marquardt, Middle Village, geraniums, salvia, coleus, coxcomb, vinca, cyclamen; August Schrader, Elmhurst, salvias, fens, beds of foliage plants, conifers; Chas. Trauth, Newark, N. J., begonias; Abe Millar, Jamaica, cannas, cut flowers of hardy stock; Julius Roehrs Co., Rutherford, N. J., group of palms; H. Maenner, Maspeth, group of palms, Boston fern; John Miesem, Elmhurst, Scottii fern, araucarias; Henry A. Dreier, Philadelphia, fine display of water lilies. There was the usual fine showing of vegetables, and F. Marquardt put up the annual column of fruits and vegetables.

Various Notes.

R. Vincent, Jr., & Son announce a visit of inspection to their dahlia fields at White Marsh, Md., on Wednesday, September 19, and expect large delegations from New York and Philadelphia. The 6 a. m. and 8 a. m. trains on the Pennsylvania will stop at Chase station and Mr. Vincent will meet all passengers. An enjoyable visit is anticipated. The Baltimore and Washington boys will be there.

Monday evening, September 10, is the opening night of the fall season of the New York Florists' Club, in the Grand Opera House building. Many matters of interest will be considered, and a large attendance is hoped for.

George Saltford has made an exhaustive canvass of the violet situation lately, visiting about 100 growers in Rhinebeck, Poughkeepsie and vicinity, and covering over fifty miles a day in his automobile. About a million plants testify to the continued enterprise of these growers. Some twenty-five new houses have been built and the output will be as large as ever, though the average quality does not promise so well as in

of the window displays in the retail windows, many of which have not been up to the New York standard lately. Dahlias grow better daily and the cactus varieties command fair prices. Orchids are scarce and values are advancing. Weddings are few, and valley is abundant and in small duced by Charles H. Totty, the Madison expert. The allotments for groups of foliage plants, orchids, pansies, roses, carnations and violets are also attractive. The only menace to a great success is lack of room.

The committee in charge includes C.

1905. There will be no scarcity, however, and the stories of black-rot and gall fly have been exaggerated. Still these pests are much in evidence, and some of the growers have met with serious losses. A few years ago these twenty-five new houses would have supplied the market demands. Now with the growing call and shipments to other cities, every grower can depend on marketing his product profitably, and still there is room.

The flower carnival at Avenne last week was a great success. A. Warendorff, who has been ill at the Mt. Sinai hospital, was fortunately convalescent and able to enjoy a little of the triumph his advice and management helped accomplish up in Westchester county.

John D. Rockefeller is erecting a million-dollar mansion, and has contracted for two Italian gardens connected with the terraces in front of it.

The new firm of Gunther Bros. is now established, and the big store at the old stand has been greatly improved and enlarged in anticipation of the natural increase of business during the coming season.

Russin & Hanfling, at 114 West Twenty-eighth street, who make a specialty of wheat sheaves and fancy baskets, have leased the entire three stories and basement at this address, and will utilize it all for florists' supplies. These men have had fifteen years' experience and are building up an excellent business.

John Foley, manager for N. Lecakes & Co., is enjoying a two weeks' vacation with his family at Belmar, N. J.

Michael Ford is back from his outing more vigorous than for years, according to his own estimate of the benefit of Atlantic City air. This will encourage the conventionists who go to Philadelphia next August, as doubtless every one of them will visit this great seaside resort while there, and so escape the heat so liberally dispensed at Dayton.

F. A. Armitage, of Hitchings & Co., is enjoying the ocean breezes at Block Harbor, Me., after a busy season.

Chas. Milling is filling his greenhouse with a fine stock of plants of all kinds. His European importation of retinispora will soon be here.

Alex J. Guttman returned Friday from his two weeks' western trip, much improved in health. He reports fine daily receipts of Victory carnations, and a big demand for plants.

Frank H. Traendly has, among other memories of Dayton, a lively tussle with the worst case of hay fever on record. J. K. Ailen brought a good supply of the same thing home with him, but has mastered it. These young men think the heat of the west a worse ordeal than our eastern humidity.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The arrival of dahlias in quantity is the feature of the market marking the advent of autumn, and the probable resumption of floral activity. Every variety of fancy dahlia that made an impression last season—C. W. Bruton, Perle d'Or, Twentieth Century and many others—can be had in quantity at tempting prices. Beauties are selling well at a shade higher prices. Mediums and short grades are, of course, most plentiful. Asters are fine, the better grades, and very cheap in the poorer. There are more asters sold than anything else. Valley, though excellent, has not been in demand. A novelty in the market is the arrival of Easter lilies at W. E. McKisick's. They are very desirable, having one or two flowers only to a stem. The present volume of business exceeds that of last season.

Club Meeting.

A large and enthusiastic meeting of the Florists' Club was held on Tuesday evening. G. C. Watson read an excellent paper on the Dayton convention from a seedsman's standpoint. A number of other addresses were made by those who had attended. John Westcott presented the club with a handsome picture of H. B. Beatty, one of the club's oldest members. Mr. Westcott's address was the most eloquent that even he has ever given.

Nominations for officers were made for the ensuing year as follows: President, Samuel S. Pennock; vice-president, Fred Bohman; secretary, Edwin Lonsdale; treasurer, J. William Colflesh.

The bowling trophies were on exhibition.

Recent Importations.

The latest arrivals in the great warehouses of "the florists' supply house of America" are the French bridal baskets of delicately woven straw. They are of new design, with long handles, graceful, flexible, and in colors exquisitely soft, Alice blue, pale pink, white, cream, yellow and lavender.

Pot covers of delicately woven winter straw in nests of six are beautiful for small to medium size plants, and for favors, for which the smaller sizes are very adapted. A violet mat to be used flat is looped with ribbon harmonizing in color with the flowers it is intended to hold. Phil is indebted to Mr. Berkowitz for a glimpse of this choice stock, just unpacked.

Meritorious Novelties.

THE REVIEW is indebted to both members of the firm of M. Rice & Co. for the opportunity afforded the Philadelphia representative of examining the novelties now on exhibition in their well-appointed show-room, and of listening to a discussion of the wants they are designed to fill. Few of these novelties are accidental, most of them being expressly created to meet some demand of the leading retailers, whose customers require that their floral arrangements shall display cultivation and taste quite as much as their books or their pictures.

The pervading idea in these novelties is best described in Mr. Rice's own words: "They are intended to enhance the beauty of the flowers and plants displayed." Natural bark and twig, deep green and copper or white are preferred. Bright colors are discarded.

One of the prettiest conceptions among these novelties is the revival of the old-fashioned bouquet holder. This revival is due to a demand that was strongly felt last season for the old-fashioned round bouquet such as grandmother carried when she was a girl. To meet this demand all the paper bouquet holders were brought into use. Now the enterprise of Mr. Rice has given us a dainty creation in lace, ribbon and chiffon, white and pale pink or delicate blue, one style suited for round, the other for flat bouquets. So appreciative have our leading florists been that this novelty is already scarce, soiled and shopworn relics of bygone days being eagerly purchased by late comers.

The effects in natural bark and twig are many and varied, and one of the most striking for midwinter dinners is the sleigh, a large size being offered for center-pieces, with tiny sizes for favors. These are also intended for Germans or Christmas trees. When filled with a few blossoms and tied with red ribbon they will prove very popular.

In direct contrast to the sleighs are the tree trunks, looking as though the woodman's ax had just finished its work. They are in medium sizes, two or three feet high, and hollowed to hold a jardiniere of long-stemmed American Beauties. There are many pretty twig baskets and hampers.

Egyptian ware is the name given to a glazed deep green china vase, massive and handsome, that would ornament a position where the decorator aims to express the idea of stability.

The split bamboo baskets, universally used for wholesaling flowers in France, come in nests of twelve. The larger sizes are intended for hampers, the smaller for flower or fruit favors. A bouquet box of basswood is very light and neat, calculated to add finish to a choice bouquet of flowers.

The lace leaves seen last season now come in colors. These leaves may be described as a tropical product with the tissue destroyed. They are being taken up by the leading florists, who lay a leaf on top of the flowers in boxes intended for discriminating flower lovers.

Various Notes.

William J. Moore is an important factor in dahlias. His boxes of flowers are of the finest varieties, and are sold in the original boxes as received from the shippers.

Visitors in town: Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Winterson, of Chicago; F. H. Holton, of Holton & Hunkel, Milwaukee; J. A. Peterson, Cincinnati; S. M. McClements, of Randolph & McClements, and Mrs. E. A. Williams, Pittsburg.

Charles E. Meehan is back from the west this week. After leaving Dayton he visited a number of cities in the middle states. He was particularly interested in the new plant which the E. G. Hill Co. is erecting at Richmond, Ind., where all the better sorts of carnations are to be grown. Their geraniums are a most important feature. Among their seedling roses are one or two which may excel the far-famed Richmond.

Wesley Clark has returned to Edward Reid's.

William E. Reynolds is now right-hand man for William J. Moore.

Arthur H. Lanser, of Wayne, drove a party of friends to the historic Valley Forge recently. Among his guests were Eugene Bernheimer, Charles F. Krueger and James McClain.

William J. Sherry, of the Johnson Seed Co., returned last week from a delightful trip to Boston. He was much interested in the market of the Hub, and there saw the famous cantaloupes grown by Marrs, of Montreal, which have created such a sensation at the Bellevue-Stratford.

The Whilldin Pottery Co. thinks nothing of shipping flower pots around the cape to Honolulu, despite the storms. Ten per cent covers the breakage. How is that for scientific packing?

Walter P. Stokes is delighted with his new trussed houses. He says they are away ahead of the old style of greenhouse construction.

Grubs and stem-rot are giving the growers a great deal of worry this season.

It is said that Isaac Kennedy, now of Cleveland, Ohio, is tenderly watching a new white rose.

Edward Towill, of Roslyn, has planted 2,600 Beauties, 3,000 Liberties, 2,500 Richmonds and 800 Maids. If you don't believe it go and see them.

Patrick H. Meehan has a pink Kaiserine Augusta Victoria of vigorous growth.

The failure of the Real Estate Trust Co. has hit many of us rather hard.

Roney Bros., of West Grove, are sending some nice flowers of Climax carnation to W. E. McKissick.

William Munro, of Garrettsford, has his large new house planted, with three benches and two beds of Beauties.

The Florists' Protective Association went into operation last Saturday. Wisely managed and loyally supported, it will be a benefit to all of us. The members will have to make sacrifices to make it go.

Charles C. Poryzess will open again at Fifteenth and Chestnut streets.

Henry J. Faust, of Merion, is sending some of his choice stock to A. M. Campbell.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Nights are gradually growing cooler and, with the more comfortable climatic conditions, the flower market slowly begins to put on new life. The worst glut of the summer season, which has certainly been a rather profitless one, is now over and improvement will be noticed each week. Roses are a little better in quality, with prices little changed.

However, less of the 50 cents per hundred stock now is seen. Carnations are improving. The new indoor stock begins to cut some figure. Prices vary from $1 to $2 per hundred. Asters sell better. Extra stock has sold up to $2, while some bring less than one-fourth that price. Valley is in moderate call. Sweet peas still arrive in small numbers. Gladioli continue quite good. There are Lilium longiflorum, speciosum and auratum, and such flowers as cosmos, tuberose, gaillardias, etc., which are in little request. A few chrysanthemums appeared at the end of last week. It is too early for the queen of autumn, for good Semple's asters discount them. No special change in green stock.

Market Sale of Stalls.

The members of the Boston Coöperative Flower Market, better known as the Music hall market, had their annual auction sale of stalls on Saturday, September 1, which was attended by a large number of growers. For some time the market has been in the basement, which proved less desirable than had been anticipated, so a move back to the old quarters on the first floor was decided upon. Big improvements have been made since this floor was previously occupied. The walls and ceiling are finely finished, the artificial light ample and ventilation and entrances much better.

W. C. Ward bought first choice, giving a premium of $75, Messrs. Porter, L. E. Small and others giving over $70 each. Over 100 stalls were sold, the total realized being about $3,500.

W. W. Tailby and Wilfred Wheeler acted as auctioneer and clerk. Refreshments were served during the sale and this feature was much appreciated.

Bay State Nurseries.

The members of the plant and flower committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society visited the Bay State Nurseries, North Abington, September 1, on invitation of the proprietor, W. H. Wyman, to inspect a new pure white form of Stokesia cyanea. Flowers are four and one-half inches in diameter and when stock is worked up the plant should be in big request. Stokesia cyanea is here grown by the thousands, but the demand is much greater than the supply. Thousands of phloxes made a brave show, while there were fine breadths of other choice herbaceous perennials, of which the firm already has ten acres, although this is only the third year they have been grown. Two nice propagating houses are located in the herbaceous nursery.

A drive over the hundred or more acres of nursery proved most interesting. The blocks of rock, Norway and other maples, oak, elms and other shade trees were extra fine. Leads over six feet were noted on maples and five feet on oaks. This is light and very strong ground. The large breadths of all the more popular deciduous shrubs were in splendid condition, while evergreens were equally good. Large shipments were being made of hemlocks, but the supply of these also was not equal to the demand.

Adjoining the packing sheds and offices a pretty, undulating ten-acre lot of woodland is being prepared and planted with Catawbiense and hybrid rhododendrons, kalmias, etc. Sufficient trees are left to provide adequate shade. Avenues are being cut through it and the whole will, when completed, make a lovely park. A new shed for storing rhododendrons and roses is being completed, with which addition the storing and shipping facilities will be greatly improved. More woodland is being constantly cleared for additional nursery stock, and when it is remembered that in 1904, when Mr. Wyman started in business in a humble way, the major portion of his present nursery was in forest, and that now he has one of the best equipped nurseries in the country, it must be admitted that he has accomplished wonders. One particularly pleasurable feature here is that thorough cleanliness pervades every department; weeds are not allowed to grow at all. A. E. Robinson, late foreman for W. T. Smith Co., Geneva, N. Y., makes a very competent and courteous manager.

Various Notes.

William Nicholson had the first chrysanthemums of the season, at the Park street market, on September 1.

T. F. Galvin had a window decoration last week of Physostegia Virginica, locally named Texas heath, which looked pretty. F. A. Fletcher, of Auburndale, is a large grower of this desirable perennial.

Alexander McKay is sending in quantities of fine outdoor-grown Lilium longiflorum and gladioli.

William Campbell has succeeded B. McGinty as head salesman for N. F. McCarthy & Co.

Large quantities of Dutch bulbs arrived at the local seed stores the last week and dealers report an active inquiry and demand for them.

James Farquhar has returned from a trip to Nevada, where he made arrangements to have large consignments of sheep manure shipped for his firm. This will be handled at their Roslindale plant.

W. W. Rawson & Co. are growing a fine collection of dahlias at Arlington this season and have put up excellent stands at recent local shows.

Patten & Co., of Tewksbury, are pulling down several old houses and replacing by modern, up-to-date ones.

John Barr, in addition to carnations, which he grows especially well, has a batch of 3,000 cyclamens, in the culture of which he is a past master.

The idea of holding a combined S. A. F. convention and exhibition in November, 1908, in lieu of August, is not favored by many here. Florists can better leave their establishments in August than at any other season, and a change to a later date could seriously cripple the attendance.

Daniel Iliffe has moved his shop and office from Somerville to 49 Washington street, north, Boston, and next season will have facilities to fill orders promptly. He has just furnished iron work for a house 40x200 being built by C. H. Patch, Arlington Heights.

H. M. Robinson & Co. have just leased a new store with 8,000 feet of floor space. They report business as satisfactory for the summer season. Their dagger ferns and galax are excellent, while a consignment just to hand of 10,000 cycas leaves are of fine quality.

Edward Wood, of Lexington, is finishing his new house, 25x160, and thinks he will grow sweet peas in it in lieu of violets, as at first planned.

Albert Roper, of Tewksbury, has just completed a house 33x300 for carnations, but has had same planted some time.

Alfred Ackerman, state forester of Massachusetts, has resigned to accept the Peabody chair of forestry in the University of Georgia. Governor Guild in accepting his resignation commended his work in this state.

Jackson Dawson recently made another find of Scotch heather in the northern part of Massachusetts, some eight acres in extent. He secured some 600 fine plants, but will wisely decline to make the exact location known, as vandals would soon clean out the whole lot. These originated from seeds scattered seventy-five years ago. At the Arnold Arboretum he has a peach from scions received from Pekin, China, the flower of which he states is superior to that of any now grown in America. He also has some splendid grapes which should prove hardy, as they withstand 90 degrees below zero in China, as well as many other valuable plants.

Welch Bros. are receiving some excellent Beauty roses and report trade in cut flowers as slowly recovering from the summer stagnation. P. Welch returns from his vacation this week and will rush work on their fine new salesrooms, which will open October 1.

Jackson Dawson recently made another find of Scotch heather in the northern part of Massachusetts, some eight acres in extent. He secured some 600 fine plants, but will wisely decline to make the exact location known, as vandals would soon clean out the whole lot. These originated from seeds scattered seventy-five years ago. At the Arnold Arboretum he has a peach from scions received from Pekin, China, the flower of which he states is superior to that of any now grown in America. He also has some splendid grapes which should prove hardy, as they withstand 90 degrees below zero in China, as well as many other valuable plants.

Welch Bros. are receiving some excellent Beauty roses and report trade in cut flowers as slowly recovering from the summer stagnation. P. Welch returns from his vacation this week and will rush work on their fine new salesrooms, which will open October 1.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS

Ladies' Auxiliary,

It is reported that every wife, daughter and sister of the members of the S. A. F., also lady members, will soon receive a letter asking coöperation to form an auxiliary for social and instructive advantages. It is reported that the letter will be addressed by a lady member and that the movement is inspired by Mrs. L. H. Maynard, of Detroit.

Freidenberger's Appreciation.

The handsome ring the S. A. F. presented me was certainly the most unexpected as well as highly appreciated token that was ever given to me. I certainly give my most hearty thanks to one and all and cannot find words to express my feeling on being the recipient of such an elegant present. I am positive that I shall always keep a warm corner in my heart for the S. A. F. and as long as I live this ring will remind me of an everlasting debt I owe to your benevolent society. In case I may ever be of any assistance to you in the future, rely on me, for I will always be willing to help the S. A. F. Thanking you all again and hoping to see you at the next convention, I am,

Yours sincerely,

JOHN C. FREIDENBERGER.

The Market.

Business has shown a slight improvement. Not only were flowers of better quality, but there was a better demand. The opening of the public schools and Labor day helped out a little, and we feel that a fall trade is about to open that will make us forget the dull summer.

Stock of all kinds is beginning to look better. Roses especially are improved in color and foliage. Beauties are selling well, and not enough good ones are coming in for the demand. Carnations also are improving, but still have short stems. There is a good demand for first-class stock. Local growers say that the plants are unusually fine and a large and fine crop is looked for soon. Asters still are in big demand. Tuberose stalks also are selling well. Other outdoor stock is plentiful. Smilax and greens of all kinds are in good supply.

Various Notes.

F. J. Farney, representing the A. L. Randall Co., of Chicago, called on the trade last week.

E. J. Fancourt, who represents S. S. Pennock, of Philadelphia, was here last week.

W. L. Hucke, lately with Poehlmann Bros. Co., Chicago, whose home is in Belleville, left last week to take a position with the Muskogee Carnation Co., Muskogee, I. T. Mr. Hucke was formerly in the retail business here.

Charles Kuehn has returned from Detroit, where he spent a few days with his parents, going there from Dayton.

Don't forget the Florists' Club meeting next Thursday afternoon in the regular meeting hall. President Ammann and President-elect Irish expect a large attendance. The newly elected officers will be installed. Two very important discussions will take place, opened by Emil Schray and E. W. Guy. Eight new members also will be acted upon.

Our four wholesalers have decided to keep open as usual during the fall and winter months. All are making preparations to handle a big trade this season. At Kuehn's, Eddie Gerlach and George Schreifer again will be in charge this season. The wire department has a force at work preparing a big stock for the season. At Ellis's, William Ossick and Christian, assisted by W. C. Smith, are looking after the business well in the absence of the boss, who is expected home by the end of the month. At Berning's, the boss and his wife have returned from their trip. With them, Otto Bruenig and Julius Koenig will look after the business again this season. George Angermueller and his brother Fred will attend to the trade, assisted by C. W. Wors.

George Waldbart, Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Meinhardt and the Misses Meinhardt have returned from the convention.

Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Weber have been spending a few days at French Lick Springs.

Henry Ostertag, of Ostertag Bros., said his August business was all that could be expected. He has booked a large number of orders for fall openings. Frank Buckshat, formerly in the retail business here, is now with Ostertag Bros.

The last public opening of Shaw's Garden of the year took place Sunday. The attendance was large, as usual, and was well handled by the students. Everything is in fine shape.

Gus Eggeling, who visited Milwaukee recently with the Eagles, has returned home.

George Angermueller was all smiles last week. It's a girl, and all are happy at home.

Bowling.

Those who attended the bowling match Monday night held a meeting and decided to organize a florists' league of three or more teams. A general meeting will be held at the Palace alleys next Monday night, and all florist bowlers are invited to attend. None but florists can join this league.

The retailers beat the wholesalers all three games Monday night, by the following scores:

THE HYBRIDIST.

Behold the bridegroom shines in gold,
Like Atrous in his pride!
Hard by in nuptial raiment blithe
Smiles daintily the bride.

I'm the officiating priest
In sober black arrayed,
As I marry with my pollen brush,
Right royal groom and maid.

I wed them with the pollen brush,
And leave them in their joy,
With never a breeze to trouble them,
Or insect to annoy.

I watch them dally—water them—
Caress them—smoothe their leaves—
And count the line of kings to come,
As a husbandman his sheaves.

Still, still I watch them tenderly,
And minister at need,
Till from the shell I can collect
The shining sable seed.

And bye-and-bye, in happy hour
A tall and stately line
Of princes and princesses shall
One fair June morning shine.

And I shall smile, and take my brush,
And find each prince a bride,
And for each princess prudently
A fitting mate provide.

So Hymen's part I still shall play,
But ne'er like Hymen err,
For never a groom or bride of mine
Hints protest or demur.

GREENFIELD, IND.—Jacob Forest has about finished a new house 16½x100 feet at his place on South Meek street. It will be used for carnations. Henry Hastings, on Tague street, is expecting to begin work on a house 15x50 feet soon. Mr. Hasting is a gardener, and will use the house for winter vegetables.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The market was not brisk last week, but it steadily gained toward the close of the period, and Saturday brought good business. Monday opened with a brisk demand, considering that it was a holiday, and one of those in which flowers have little place. There was, of course, not much doing in the afternoon, but the opening was considered as pre-saging a good September business.

The summer flowers are nearing an end. There continue to be large receipts of asters, and the quality of some of the stock is superb, but there is an increasing proportion of short stems and small flowers, which are difficult to move at any quotable prices. Indeed, a considerable part of the low grade stuff finds its way to the waste box. Gladioli have lost their superior quality. A little of the stock is of the superb grade noted in the past fortnight, but the great majority show the approach of the end of the season. Dahlias do not seem to have done as well this season as usual, and they do not cut much figure in the wholesale houses, although there are larger supplies than the market requires, for the dahlia is not a popular flower here. We see few of the singles and cactus types, with which the eastern retailers do such good work. Tuberoses are abundant.

The cuts of Beauties are heavier than they were at this season last year, and prices are lower for the long-stemmed stock. The quality is excellent. Bride and Bridesmaid are now practically all from young stock and stems are not yet long, although some early planted stock is giving good cuts. Kaiserin is of quality superior to Bride and sells quickly. There are large receipts of Richmond and Liberty, but these are not good summer roses and it is difficult to obtain quoted prices for any considerable shipment. Chatenay is abundant.

There are carnations for all requirements, some good outdoor stock being received, and many growers are already cutting their first crop from indoors. The latter are still short in stem, but they suffice for funeral flowers.

Green goods are in abundant supply, but there is already an increase in the demand, for milliners and dry goods stores are holding early fall openings.

Maywood.

F. R. Hills has leased the new store on Lake street next to the Maywood State Bank, where he will open a first-class retail store about October 1. Mr. Hills has had greenhouses at North Eighth avenue and Tenth street for the last ten years. During the summer he added three new greenhouses, each one 25x130 feet, making twelve in all, covering 36,000 square feet. He makes a specialty of roses and carnations and his annual coal consumption is from 500 to 600 tons.

Evanston Doings.

The marriage of Henry Weiland, of Denver, son of M. Weiland, of Evanston, and Miss Mary Bugner took place Wednesday, September 5. It was a morning ceremony and attended by a large number of the family, relatives and friends. Peter Weiland was up from New Castle, and Mrs. Olinger, a sister, from Cincinnati, the wife of the manager of the selling end of Weiland & Olinger's business, was present. Henry Weiland is in the fruit growing business in Denver, where he and his bride will go after a brief wedding trip.

John Weiland is building a new store in Evanston. He found rent so high in good locations that he bought property on Sherman avenue, near the postoffice, and is putting up a substantial building, one store of which will be fitted up in first-class style for his own occupancy.

R. F. Gloede is building a large carnation house. He reports some good orders from out of town for landscape work.

Flower Market News.

Schrader & Meyer, of Riverdale, have leased space in the market and hereafter will sell their own crop, carnations.

Anton Felke, of Wilmette, who formerly had a stand in the market, again will do business there this season.

E. Francis has resigned his position with Vaughan & Sperry and after September 15 will sell the product of Scheiden & Schoos at the market. They have about 75,000 feet of glass in carnations.

The Guardian Angel Orphan Asylum up to September 1 had rented part of the Kruchten space in the market, but now has taken space direct from the management. At present they are marketing a large crop of asters. In the winter the principal crop is carnations. Miss Martha Guntherberg is the saleslady, and is an exceptionally capable one.

place Sunday, September 2. There are over 100 men on the pay roll, and with their families it made a party of over 200. Pictures of the start for the picnic grounds, and the group, appear elsewhere in this issue. The day's program was cut short by rain in the afternoon, but it was an outing hugely enjoyed by all who were not deterred by the threatening character of the weather.

August Weather.

The hottest day last month was 92 degrees, on August 22. All through the month it was 4.5 degrees warmer than normal. The rainfall was only 1.43 inches, against 4.46 inches in August, 1905. Since January 1 we are 6.16 inches less than normal, and the accumulated excess of temperature is 593 degrees.

Various Notes.

Flint Kennicott was downtown Labor day for the first time after another week's tussle with his old enemy, rheumatism.

Paul Bolm & Co., 552 North Clark street, have a fine delivery wagon on the street. It must prove an excellent advertisement.

Miss A. L. Tonner advises the A. L. Randall Co. that she arrived safely in New York yesterday, after her three months' European trip.

Chas. T. Neiglick offers for rent the establishment at 2104 North Clark street, conducted for many years by F. J. Neiglick, who died a fortnight ago. Mr.

Neiglick was one of the best known of the north side growers. Carnations and ferns were his specialty. There are now three houses well stocked with ferns.

C. M. Dickinson made a brief trip to Detroit last week.

Wm. Kreutz, Rose Hill, has a large cemetery trade. His houses are now rather empty, but in spring they are filled to their utmost capacity.

C. W. McKellar says the demand for orchids is not so brisk as for asters, nor is the supply so great. He is doing a nice shipping business in asters, as he has some special stock.

P. J. Hauswirth had a busy time last week, when the finance committee of the Red Men held its annual session here.

M. G. Holding, local manager for the American Window Glass Co., has removed his office from the warehouse on Sixteenth and Canal streets to the Ogden building, at 34 Clark.

Fritz Bahr, at Highland Park, today is giving his annual entertainment to a party of Chicago friends, who went out last evening to spend the night with Mr. Bahr and get an early start this morning for the Libertyville fair. Those in the party are Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Hauswirth, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Asmus, Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Winterson and Mrs. Walter Kreitling and son. Added to the party at Highland Park was Tom Turtle and his daughter.

J. Mendel and John Ziska returned Tuesday from a few days' fishing at Fox lake. One of their experiences there was seeing a man drowned through the overturning of a boat. A man with a cork leg escaped!

Mrs. J. B. Deamud has recovered from a week's severe illness and Mr. and Mrs. Deamud started Tuesday for the east, to be gone ten days.

W. E. Lynch, of E. H. Hunt's, reported for duty Tuesday after his illness.

A. L. Vaughan, of Vaughan & Sperry, is at Grand Rapids this week visiting the firm's numerous growers there.

A. H. Budlong makes the trip from the greenhouses to the store in an automobile. It has taken him longer to make the run since he received an admonition at Evanston a few days ago, where the officer said his machine was too swift for that town.

Wieter Bros. are cutting heavily of Beauties and other roses. They also have a big crop of Sprengerl ready, and this is an item not plentiful in some houses.

Peter Reinberg is at Morgan, Minn., this week after ducks.

Kruchten & Johnson are moving their ice-box to another corner of the room, thereby gaining much light in the store.

J. A. Sikuta says he has spent the quiet moments of summer in composing an essay on Viola odorata rubra.

Visitors.

There have been a number of visitors in town this week. Among those encountered were A. L. Glaser, Dubuque, Iowa; Paul Beyer, South Bend, Ind.; Martin Reukauf, Philadelphia.

DENVER.

The Market.

The last week has seen an especially good business for August; the month ended well, and at times business was quite brisk. There have been for the last ten days more funeral flower orders than at any time this summer, with the result that all the florists have been kept pretty busy on the whole.

The national convention of press clubs met here, and made business for some of the dealers. The reception was at the Brown Palace hotel, which was decorated by the Colfax Avenue Floral Co. and was quite elaborate. The banquet three days later was at the same place; it was also fine, the floral work being done by the Park Floral Co. On the whole, trade is good, considering the season, with all the craft.

The market prices remain about the same as last week. There is a good demand for select Beauties, and quite a few are seen at the larger shops, retailing for $5 and $6 per dozen; the medium and short stems are more plentiful, and find a ready sale. Brides and Maids are still below the standard, although they are getting better every day. Few selects are seen, but some fine Liberties, Richmonds and Chateaux are coming in larger quantities.

Good carnations are not plentiful; some few of the new crop are seen, but are not of long stem. Asters are in good supply, the white perhaps being the scarcest. As the quality is good, large quantities are being disposed of. Dahlias are now at their best, and find a ready sale, the greater number of them being furnished by the Wilmore dahlia farm. The Park Floral Co. sold nearly 5,000 last week.

Various Notes.

N. A. Benson has finished another new house 25x125 feet, and has it planted to carnations, consisting mostly of Enchantress, Haunah Hobart and Pink and White Lawson.

Among the visitors last week were Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Wiegand, of Indianapolis, en route to Honolulu, and William Edlefsen, of Milwaukee, a guest of the Press Club. Both Mr. Wiegand and Mr. Edlefsen agree that they find more pleasure in visiting the west than the east, as they find more things here that are new to them.

B. E. Gillis has returned from his vacation, most of it being spent in the mountains.

Vice-president Charles W. Fairbanks was a guest of the city for a few hours Saturday, August 25. A fine luncheon was tendered him by Thomas Walsh at the Brown Palace hotel. The tables and room were decorated in an artistic manner by George H. Cooper, of the Park Floral Co. E. S. K.

BUFFALO.

The Market.

Business has been fairly good, mostly all in one line. W. J. Palmer is the first with a new cut of carnations, displaying daily a lot of fine Enchantress. We are getting a grand lot of asters at present, and through Mr. Kasting a grand lot of gladioli.

I noticed our Main street stores Saturday night. How different they are now from the displays of ten years ago. All of them were beautiful. If there is any business where an artistic window display is of value, it is surely that of the florist.

After a long dry spell, the drought has been broken by some heavy rains, much to the comfort and welfare both of animal and vegetable kingdom. Look for Agaricus campestris now any fine morning.

The Scotts' Picnic.

Last week the William Scott Co. held its annual outing at Corfu. While we must admit it was a jolly time and all enjoyed it greatly, we do not entirely approve of these private affairs any more than we do the personal flower shows held by prominent firms in many cities. Where there is a club, the picnic should receive the support of all the fraternity, and more particularly should all help to make our flower shows a success, instead of standing aloof and saying, "I am going to have a show of my own." To do the latter is selfish, and shows a lack of loyalty to your city and business.

August 29 twenty members of the firm and employees started from the Buffalo end of the business in a big automobile for the ride of twenty-five miles to Corfu. They reached the little village safely and the first number on the program was a dinner at the Union hotel. David's grand little boy of seven months was toast-master. The chief event was a game of baseball between the Buffalo end of the firm and the Corfu end. The Corfu men were the victors, thirteen to eight, mostly through the errors of W. B. Scott, Roland Cloudsly and the fumbles of little Billy at second base. Various athletic sports were indulged in, and 'neath the shade of Maple Grove the ladies of the party spread a bounteous lunch, both solid and liquid, to fortify us against the long ride home. The features of the homeward journey were the many surprises that George Troup sprung on us and the songs and comic verses of little Eddie, whom we had looked upon as a little angel. This is indeed a precocious age.

Various Notes.

We had a call last week from Charles Beyer, of St. Louis. He regretted that business prevented his attendance at Dayton, so the next best thing was a week of the cool breezes of Lake Erie and the wonders of Niagara. Mrs. Beyer and two friends were with him.

We are all settled down again from our trip to Dayton, and all lost more or less weight. Mrs. Charles Guenther, of Hamburg, lost two and one-half ounces, while President Kasting was reduced by seventy-five pounds, but what we gained in pleasure and knowledge more than offset all this. W. S.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

The constant rains last week hampered business a great deal, but at present we are having clear, cool weather. Continuous rains have almost ruined outdoor flowers. Asters, tuberoses and hydrangeas have suffered considerably. Fortunately nearly all the growers have completed planting their carnations; there is a great deal of stem-rot reported. Smilax is doing well, but it is feared it will be scarce.

Various Notes.

Calla lilies, 7x9 Harrisii lilies and large freesias are scarce here; the florists are now looking forward to the receipt of the Holland bulbs, and it is hoped the shipments will be far better than last year.

Clematis paniculata seems to be the favorite vine for the suburban residents, and is noted for its beauty and sweet fragrance. It is a hardy plant, and very little attention is required.

F. C. Bauer, of Govanstown, has one of the finest pink asters on the market. The plants are five feet high, with stems thirty-six inches long. This is one of Mr. Bauer's own seedlings, crossed between Benthey and Kate Locke. He claims it does better inside, and is early. He also has a new, light red aster averaging four and one-half feet high, and a fine collection of coleuses, twenty-five varieties.

Prospects are encouraging for the violet growers, and present indications point to a large yield. No spot can be found, and no doubt the single violets will be the leaders, as the double varieties seem to be impossible to raise here any more.

A. A. Anderson, of Govanstown, has rebuilt a house 26x100 feet, which he will devote entirely to choice roses. Mr. Anderson is noted as one of the best American Beauty rose growers in the state.

Isaac H. Moss, of Govanstown, is erecting three houses, each 18x26 feet, of the latest type. They will cost about $6,000.

Frederick Seidlich, of Woodlawn, Md., is erecting several greenhouses, and will install a gasoline engine.

exhibit a large line of their goods. Thursday is Governor's day, and the gardeners and florists generally pick out that day to attend.

H. Halliday Emich, of Arlington, has an extra fine, ten-year-old night-blooming cereus, which has during the last week produced six blooms, and three more are forming. The plant is quite a novelty, and many persons have come from a long distance to see it.

WATSONIA ARDERNEI ALBA.

This species of bulb from the Cape is likely to become a much valued flower for cutting and in the making of bouquets, wreaths, buttonholes and personal adornment in various ways. The plant is of the easiest culture, and the flowers of the purest white. When planted in the month of May, in good soil, in a warm situation, it will flower from the first week in July till the last week in September. The bulb is amenable to pot culture in the manner of gladioli, and by choosing cool positions for these and extending the potting season it can be had in bloom till a much later date.

The value of this species of watsonia is becoming generally recognized, and the demand for the flowers is greatly in excess of the supply, and must increase as time goes on. No market grower can afford to neglect its cultivation; and it is a matter for congratulation that the bulb increases rapidly in these islands, is not liable, like the gladiolus, to any diseases, so far, and it is cheap. This, and Gladiolus The Bride are two of the best white florists' flowers introduced in recent years into this country.—Gardeners' Magazine.

RACINE, WIS.—A. J. Fidler has again resumed charge of the greenhouses which he disposed of last year to Rudolph Mohr, of Chicago, who this week turned the property back to its original owner.

COLUMBUS, O.—G. Drobisch reports too much rain this summer, with geraniums considerably damaged by it. One bed of Nutt geraniums at the Dayton Soldiers' Home is entirely killed by the wet weather. Carnations have done well under these conditions, and no stem-rot has yet appeared.

SWEET PEA SEED

Christmas Pink and Florence Denzer (pure white), are now ready. These two well-known varieties are raised by over 2,000 florists all over the world. Here is one of many letters I received:

DEAR SIR: My Sweet Peas, which I raised from your seed, received the HIGHEST AWARD at Boston, by the Carnation Exhibit, being over 18 inches long.

JOHN T. GALE, Tewksbury, Mass.

Price: 1/4 lb., 75c; 1 lb., $2.00, mailed free. NEW Christmas flowering Hybrids, 20 to 30 colors, mostly blue salmon, purple, lavender, in mixture.

Mrs. Edie Wild, carmine 1 trade pkt., $1.00; 5 trade pkts., $4.00. No order for more than 5 pkts. taken from each customer just now.

These new Hybrids are just as free bloomers as Christmas Pink and Florence Denzer, some much larger, and received first-class Certificate of Merit from the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, Boston March 24.

All seed originated with me is sold in my original sealed pkts. with cultural directions, to growers, for raising cut flowers, but none for seedsmen for propagating.

and eastern Michigan is being delivered in fine condition, with a fair yield. The bean crop has suffered from drought and many fields show a shortage from estimates. Pods have many vacant places and the size of bean is smaller. We are not feeling that a surplus of any magnitude will be produced, and some varieties are developing shortages."

S. M. Pease, of the Cleveland Seed Co., Avon, N. Y., writes under date of September 4: "The bean harvest is now on. No threshing is done as yet, so that we cannot tell how the yield will be. We apprehend that the majority of the beans will come in a little under average crops, as at the critical time, when they should have been filling, we had quite dry weather, which prevented their developing. It was feared that the blight would do considerable damage, but we do not think it is going to turn out so bad. On the whole we imagine the bean harvest will be fairly satisfactory, and there will be enough beans to go around.

"Sweet corn in this locality is doing finely, is fairly ripened off, and will make a good sample. The acreage is rather under the average.

"Our peas are being grown in Canada in different districts. The early varieties will prove to be a full average crop. The medium earlies will be fairly satisfactory, but the late and long-podded sorts are destined to be quite short, as they suffered from severe drought for about three weeks at the most critical time, when some were podding and others were filling. Samples this year will be exceptionally fine. The shrinkage in damaged peas is less than former years. We are expecting surpluses of both peas and beans to offer the trade."

IMPORTS.

On the Patricia, from Hamburg, arriving at New York August 31, J. M. Thorburn & Co. had fourteen bags and F. B. Vandegrift & Co. 191 bags clover, and to order there were 510 bags clover and forty bags alfalfa.

On the Hudson, from Havre, reaching New York August 31, Henry Nungesser & Co. had 278 bags clover, and there were fifty-five cases of French bulbs.

HOLLAND BULB CROPS.

Now that both hyacinth and tulip crops have been lifted in Holland, the disappointment as regards the hyacinths is certainly much keener than could have been expected. Notwithstanding that the crops had been looking well until the time of lifting, it is found that first size hyacinths do not come up to the usual mark, and in consequence large bulbs are at present scarce and being sold at high prices. The trade generally in hyacinths is brisk. Considering their slow moving last autumn the present prices realized by the growers are satisfactory and no surplus is likely to remain on their hands.

Tulips of nearly all varieties are at present selling at fancy prices, not only caused by brisk demand, but principally caused by the enormous numbers that are being bought for the large cultures that are being started in the north of the country, whereby many millions of tulips are being taken off the market and causing an unprecedented sharp rise in the prices. Those of the foreign dealers that have secured their requirements early in the season will now reap the benefit of early ordering, as many orders are now being refused owing to stocks being completely sold out.—Horticultural Trade Journal.

ACETYLENE FOR PLANTS.

The results obtained in the elaborate experiments with acetylene on plant life at Cornell University, as set forth in a paper by Prof. John Craig read before the International Acetylene Association, is what would be expected, when the close approximation of acetylene illumination to sunlight is considered, says the Acetylene Journal.

The sun, as every one knows, stands for life and development in plant culture. It is the chief element upon which the gardener who forces flowers and vegetables under glass depends. The dark periods when the sun refuses to reveal itself are as well dark periods to the spirits of the forcing man. When, therefore, he can turn to what is virtually sunshine, as produced with ease, economy and in abundance by acetylene, he at once finds help over hard places.

Professor Craig, to whom we are indebted for this important experiment, begins his paper by quoting Munsterberg as showing the nearly equal color values of the sun and acetylene as revealed by spectrum analysis. It is a showing such as no other artificial light reveals. In that brief comparison is found the basis of the success with acetylene in plant culture.

It will be noticed that the benefit from acetylene was found not only as making up for deficiency of sunlight, but in adding to the efficiency of sunlight for plant growth. In the experiment on one hundred and fifty different kinds of plants, with few exceptions the growth was stronger, while the time of bloom and of maturity was materially advanced.

For instance, strawberries were brought into bearing sixteen days, or more than two weeks, earlier as a result of acetylene added to sunlight. In the case of geranium and lily blooms, the gain was even greater, being sometimes three weeks ahead. In many plants the amount of bloom was increased several fold through the use of acetylene.

Radishes are a common crop with the under-glass grower. Not only was the maturing period of radishes shortened 20 per cent, but the product was increased in weight under the influence of acetylene as compared with sunlight alone.

When it is considered that the shortest and darkest days of the year are those preceding the holidays, when prices of flowers and vegetables reach their highest limit, it is not hard to perceive how the plant grower will profit by this agent in the hastening of his produce to market.

It is not overlooked that the cost of carbide must be reckoned, but with the season of growth shortened by weeks, a large, direct reduction in the always costly fuel bill is made. The force of this point is that the saving on fuel comes at a time when the outside temperature demands liberal coaling in order to provide the requisite forcing heat. The increase in the product from acetylene, as noted in radishes and in some flowers, likewise will go directly to offsetting the outlay for acetylene.

We shall be surprised if the enterprising plant growers of America do not get busy in making tests to their own satisfaction of the advantage of acetylene in plant culture, along lines so commendably suggested by the Cornell experiments.

HEUCHERAS.

Heuchera micrantha is worth growing for cutting. When first growing this species I was not much impressed with it, but established plants have proved the contrary. Although the individual flowers are very small, the flower spikes, as a whole, are extremely useful to cut for placing in trumpet glasses. Mixed with grasses or a few sprays of asparagus, they give a light, airy appearance to the arrangement, and are very effective when so used. Spikes of this heuchera may be cut three feet in length. We have also a creamy-white flowered kind, which promises, when established, to give good spikes of large flowers, while it is also effective in a mass. There is also a reddish-pink heuchera, which produces good flowers on spikes nearly two feet in length; this is a strong-growing species. H. sanguinea splendens is fairly well known, and is the richest colored of them all.—Gardeners' Magazine.

The Florists' Manual

We note your advertisement in a recent number of the REVIEW of the second edition of Scott's Florists' Manual, and request that you enter our order for a copy of this valuable book. The writer is thoroughly acquainted with the first edition of this work, having often had occasion to use it for reference while a student at the Michigan Agricultural College. Please rush this order, for we feel, with Mark Twain, that we "would rather not use violence."

POLYGONUM.

I am sending you a spray of a plant quite common in Michigan. Please tell me what the name of it is. G. B. S.

The plant is Polygonum cuspidatum. It is one of the larger polygonums, coming originally from Japan. It is used to some extent for tall groups among shrubbery, and occasionally escapes from gardens and grows wild. It is not quite so robust as Polygonum Sachalinense.

I WANT to thank the REVIEW for the many orders it has brought me.—S. J. McMICHAEL, Findlay, O.

CORRUGATED PAPER BOXES.

Kindly advise us if the use of corrugated pasteboard boxes is practical for shipping purposes in any kind of weather? We use at present basswood boxes and in zero weather line them thickly with newspapers. We would like to know if any shippers use pasteboard boxes, and the cost of same per box or per hundred. We would want three sizes, one to carry 200 carnations, one to carry 400 or 500 carnations, and one to carry 600 to 700. Can you advise if any up-to-date shippers have made use of this class of box? W. G.

Many shippers of cut flowers use corrugated pasteboard boxes in all kinds of weather, of course lining and wrapping as may be required in severe winter weather. Probably a majority of the Rhinebeck violets are shipped in these corrugated pasteboard boxes, not only to nearby New York market but to the distant Chicago market. And one large grower ships roses to Chicago, a distance of 200 miles, in corrugated pasteboard boxes of the largest size. There is a material saving in the express charges and, each box being good for several trips, they can be knocked down, bundled and returned by freight, or even by express, for less than has been the charge for the return of the usual wood empties. As to the cost of the corrugated box, it is not large. For exact quotations consult the advertisers in the REVIEW.

ton. The other houses are in Beauties, Golden Gate, Bridesmaid and Bride.

Last winter the output of this concern was all taken by one of the leading florists of Portland, but having since then largely increased its capacity, the firm expects this season to make large shipments of its cut flowers to the other leading cities of the northwest.

PORTLAND, ORE.

The Market.

There is not much doing in the retail line, and, as one man remarked, business this summer is not to be compared with it a year ago this time. More and more we realize that the fair was a great factor in many ways. Some nice funeral work was seen in August, but socially it never was so quiet as now, the hot weather and absence from town of our trianism one of the best remedies for insomnia and loss of appetite, and the beneficial results derived therefrom inspired us to keep up the good work.

After having made several promises we finally fulfilled them in an all-day outing, beginning at Twenty-eighth street and Sandy road, where six years ago Max Smith commenced business in a small way, and now owns 15,000 feet of glass. Mr. Smith is a carnation enthusiast, directing his efforts to the improvement of this favorite flower. He has all his houses planted, and during our travels we have not seen plants looking healthier or more promising.

Our next point of interest was the Russellville Nursery Co., at Montavilla. We had heard of the great reputation of this place and decided on making a personal inspection. After presenting our credentials to the proprietor, H. A. Lewis, we were escorted over eighty acres of as fine a lot of nursery stock as has been our pleasure to look upon in many a year. Nowhere in Europe do the holly, azalea and rhododendron thrive better than in Oregon, our moderate climate being especially adapted to their culture. There were thousands of them in perfect condition. Mr. Lewis imports largely every year to keep pace of the ever-increasing demand. What attracted our close attention was a 20-acre patch of cherry, apple and prune trees two years old, equal to the value of a $15,000 bank account, standing as erect as a crack regiment just ready for inspection. The monetary value of eighty acres near Portland is no small item.

Boarding a passing freight train going west, we rode ten miles, and at the signal "down brakes" alighted at St. Johns. Here we met a new florist, D. E. Brodahl, just making a beginning, and if he has the grit to hang on, at the end of five years he will not regret locating here.

One mile south John Nolte has prospered for sixteen years and sits "in the shade of the old apple tree," refusing $20,000 for his property. The real estate business is occupying most of his time.

The Sibson Rose Nurseries, Portland, Ore.

ROSES AT PORTLAND, ORE.

Many of the beautiful homes in Portland and other cities of the northwest are decorated with rose bushes procured from the Sibson Rose Nurseries, of which two partial views are published in this issue.

Mr. Sibson, the proprietor of this concern, is recognized in his home city as an authority on rose culture, and he makes a specialty of keeping in close touch with the best garden and exhibition varieties that are introduced. The nursery at present consists of about twenty-five acres, fifteen acres of which are exclusively devoted to roses. In addition to the nursery business there is a wholesale cut flower department, and in this branch also roses are made the specialty.

There are at present seven greenhouses, containing about 50,000 feet of glass. All are planted to roses for cut flowers, and visitors speak highly of the clean, healthy and up-to-date appearance of the establishment. This department is under the charge of Alfred Woodington, who learned his business with some of the large growers near Chicago.

Mr. Sibson was at the St. Louis flower show at the world's fair in November, 1904, when Richmond was awarded the prize as the best seedling rose exhibited, and he has great confidence in the future of this charming rose. He has planted one house 34x200 feet to Richmond, and another to Miss Kate Moul-the art of cultivating these most useful flowers down to perfection. The retail stores can always depend on Mr. Padrick for the best flowers and the latest varieties.

Returning home by way of Williams avenue, we made our first call on George Betz in Albina. This is on the east side, and Mr. Betz showed rare judgment when he selected his present location eighteen years ago. He is the proud possessor of an acre of ground, a handsome residence and 16,000 feet of glass in a fashionable neighborhood. Associated with him are his three sons, and the united efforts of this family have built up a fine enterprise. An outside investment, including part ownership in a mining industry, we learned, assured handsome returns on development.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The big street-car strike is on in San Francisco, and as a consequence the dealers have to face one of the quietest spells we ever have witnessed. The retail stores are situated several miles from all the railroad stations and ferries and it has made deliveries difficult. Several of the suburban electric lines have also been tied up, so that it is necessary for the growers to depend on the steam cars.

Roses continue scarce, with some demand for good stock. Carnations are not so good as we have been used to seeing at this time. Other classes of stock are offered in just about sufficient quantity to fill demands. Asters are getting scarcer, and in a couple of weeks will be over for the season. Sweet peas are getting short of stem. The weather is much cooler than it has been, which fact is gratifying to dealers in general.

Various Notes.

The California Nursery Co., at Niles, Cal., is busy with the budding of roses and ornamental stock at this time. About 100 men are employed at this place.

Hugh Kirk is employed at present on the grounds of F. M. Smith, in East Oakland, Cal.

E. M. Sanborn reports a good increase in trade with the opening of the state university at Berkeley.

The City Hall park in Oakland is being remodeled under the direction of Malcom Lamond, head gardener for the city.

John D. Meyer has gone on a two weeks' trip to Tonopah and Goldfield, Nevada.

Owing to the difficulty of reaching the San Francisco stores, many of the growers have made an attempt to unload quantities of stock in Oakland. The retailers have been able to buy stock for the last week at their own prices.

A. L. Perkins, late of Los Angeles, Cal., is in town on a visit. Mr. Perkins is well pleased with this part of the coast, and may make arrangements to remain here permanently.

John M. Holland has purchased several acres of land at Hayward, Cal., with the intention of experimenting with various kinds of bulbs.

The Piedmont Seed and Floral Co., of Oakland, has gotten nicely settled in its new location on San Pablo avenue, Oakland. They find both the store and the location much more desirable than their old quarters on Broadway. G.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.
Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas. C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

THE prospects for fall are bright; each year sees an increase in the autumn deliveries.

STOCKS of the Baby Rambler rose held by nurserymen in Holland are reported to be very large.

THE good crops in western apple-growing states promise to stimulate the demand for stock to plant new orchards.

A NOTE on the progress of the Bay State Nurseries, North Abington, Mass., in the Boston news letter this week will be of interest.

G. L. TABOR, Glen St. Mary, Fla., has strengthened his staff by adding Prof. H. H. Hume, of the University of Florida, who also is an experienced nurseryman.

THE fifth annual convention of the National Nut Growers' Association will be held at Scranton, Miss., October 31 to November 2. E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex., is president.

L. R. BRYANT, the Princeton nurseryman who is secretary of the Illinois State Horticultural Society, announces that the annual meeting and exhibition will be held at Champaign, December 12 to 14.

IN practically all wholesale nursery centers the season has been a good one for growing stock, and with the heavy plantings of last spring there will be large supplies for the approaching delivery seasons.

DURING the summer some of the leading retail florists have made splendid use of the magnificent irises offered by up-to-date nurserymen, and the nurseries are now feeling the result in good orders for plants.

THE annual inspection of the nurseries of the state of Texas under the new law is now in progress. The law requires that these inspections shall be made between July 1 and November 1 of each year. The first of these inspections was made last year and resulted in the condemnation of a large amount of nursery stock. The inspection is under the general supervision of the state commissioner of agriculture, but the work is performed by a state inspector and six or eight deputies. The present inspector is Captain A. W. Orr.

MINNESOTA HORTICULTURE.

The horticultural interests of Minnesota are making marked advancement. Most of this is due to the efficient work of Secretary A. W. Latham, of the Minnesota Horticultural Society; he has made the organization one of the strongest in the United States, it having over 2,000 members.

Having settled some of the fruit problems, so that the apple belt is being moved up to Manitoba, the people are now turning their attention to home adornment. The nurseries all over the state are prospering. L. L. May & Co.

have an immense establishment at St. Paul.

A new nursery recently has been started at Paynesville, to be known as the Elmwood Select Nursery. It is a branch of the C. S. Harrison nurseries at York, Neb. Frank Brown, the manager of the new venture, is a progressive farmer. He has taken hold of the work with enthusiasm. His first efforts, even under adverse conditions, have been successful. He already has a fine collection of ornamental shrubs, peonies and phlox. In the spring he will plant several thousand loniceras for hedges, at least twenty kinds of lilacs, besides syringas and spiræas of the hardy kinds. He will plant a large number of evergreens also. Mr. Brown will have unlimited backing for the enterprise, and a successful business is predicted. C. S. H.

PETERSON IN EUROPE.

After a four months' tour of Europe William A. Peterson, proprietor of the Peterson Nursery, Chicago, has returned to direct the work of the fall season, opened by the digging, dividing, replanting or shipping of peonies, which are a leading specialty in his establishment. Mr. Peterson went abroad at the season of peony blooming in France and Holland, and made automobile tours of the nursery centers of those countries for the purpose of seeing as many as possible of the European stocks of peonies, at the time when he could gain the best information as to their true-ness. By using an automobile he was able to cover much more ground than could otherwise have been gone over, and he says he gained invaluable information as to which firms keep their stocks unmixed and have varieties true to name. He found some choice varieties in large supply and bought heavily, not only of varieties scarce in this country, but also of varieties of which he has thousands in his own field, being offered some tempting prices as compared to our American values. In the aggregate the shipments soon to arrive will be possibly the heaviest of any peony importations ever brought to this country, although as a rule Mr. Peterson says he would rather buy stock in this country than in Europe, the earlier planting possible with American stock giving a start which is well worth a little extra cost.

Mr. Peterson believes the landscape departments of American nurseries are destined to develop into important features of the business, and he has devoted much attention to this section of his own establishment. At the close of his inspection of the peonies he took up the study of landscaping, and devoted some weeks to visiting the best examples of landscaping throughout the whole of Europe. He said that, while he found many things worthy of emulation, the point which impressed him most forcibly was the better care taken of the grounds for long periods of years, and it was to this spic-and-spanness he attributes much of the international reputation possessed by many of the famous parks and estates; there is nothing to compare with it in this country.

Mr. Peterson possesses a splendid horticultural library, one of the best in America, and on this trip he added to it many rare and old volumes.

METHODS OF GROWING.

[A paper by T. R. Peyton, read before the Missouri State Horticultural Society.]

In growing the best nursery trees, the first thing to consider is, what are the chief requisites; and we believe the most important of these principal requirements is the soil. Experiments have fully demonstrated that certain soils are best adapted to certain crops, and especially is this true in the growing of horticultural products. Hence, to grow the best nur-very trees the grower must consider first whether or not the land which he expects to use is capable of producing under favorable conditions a first-class product of that particular kind of tree.

The Best Soil.

The best land for general nursery purposes is one which contains a good percentage of clay, lying as nearly level as possible. However, when we say level we do not mean flat prairie land, as that class of land is generally underlaid with hardpan or a stratum of uncongenial, stiff clay, which is inclined to hold too much surface water, and therefore is not adapted to horticultural purposes.

Nursery trees constitute a crop which occupies the land for a number of years, and unless the land is in good condition when the trees are planted, there will be little opportunity to raise a good product. With fruit trees, the age of the tree determines its salableness, hence it is important that the growth within the given time be rapid and strong. With ornamentals, however, the value is determined by the size of the specimen, with little regard to its age. It therefore follows that lands which are not sufficiently strong to allow of the profitable growing of fruit trees may still be used for growing ornamentals.

Nurseries Not Hard on Land.

Any soil that will produce a good crop of wheat or corn should easily furnish in three years ten times the plant food used by the trees. All experience proves that a crop of nursery trees does not exhaust the land of its fertility. In fact, it is generally considered that land from which trees have been removed is in the very best condition for a crop of wheat or potatoes. Yet, despite this fact, it is also generally considered that land can seldom raise two good crops of nursery trees in succession. The reason for this condition of the tree lands is that the soil is injured in its physical texture by the methods of cultivation and treatment.

The best nursery lands are those which contain a basis of clay, and they are the ones which soonest suffer under unwise treatment. The land is kept under high culture, and is therefore deeply pulverized. There is practically no herbage on the soil to protect it during the winter. The soil, deeply broken and robbed of its humus, runs together and cements itself and it then requires rest in clover or other herbage crop to bring it back into its right condition. This resting period allows Nature to replace the fiber in the soil and make it once more so porous and mellow that plants can find a congenial foothold in it.

Methods of Propagating.

Having considered briefly the soil and its treatment, we pass to the methods of propagation commonly used in growing the best nursery trees. There has been a most varied discussion of the relative merits of root-grafted and budded fruit trees for many years. For the most part, this discussion has been unprofitable, for there has been little earnest effort to arrive at exact methods of comparison. The disputants have too often dealt in generalized statements, and it must be said that prejudice, and the desire to advocate the particular stock which one is growing, are not unknown to these discussions.

Some experiments have been made for the purpose of determining the relative merits of the two methods of propagation, but none of the experiments seem to have really analyzed the subject or to have arrived at any definite conclusion.

Before proceeding to a discussion of the comparative effects of budding and root-grafting, it is essential that certain definitions be clearly fixed in the mind.

The budding of fruit stocks in the nursery is performed in the summer time upon stocks which were set in the spring. These stocks are trimmed, or dressed, before they are set in the nursery.

NEW PINK CARNATION FOR 1907

Color—A peculiar shade of lovely pink, with a faint yellowish cast; several shades lighter than the Lawson. Unlike most pinks, the brightest sun does not injure the color. Size—3 to 4 inches in diameter when established. Odor—Pleasing, but not strong. Stems—Invariably strong, but always graceful, ranging from 12 to 30 inches during the season. Habit, etc.—A very quick, active grower, making specimen plants in a short time, even from late cuttings. On account of its rapid growth, requires supporting very soon after benching. Gets away rapidly, blooms early and gives long stems right from the start. Productiveness—Prodigious is the best word we know of to use here. It is the most incessant bloomer, early and late, we have ever grown. Stock limited. Delivery January 5 to 10 and later. Price $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

We especially recommend the New Japonica Rosea. Color, fine, rich pink, about the shade of Gloire de Lorraine Begonia; coloring is even and does not show the white or washed-out shadings sometimes seen in Otaksa. Foliage, uniform deep green and does not streak nor yellow. Has taken medals in Europe and is a distinct acquisition.

Our plants are grown outdoors in beds and flat houses; will be taken inside before frost, and available for delivery next month, when wanted.

The Market.

The trade in general talk as if they were glad August was past, and all are hopeful of an early improvement in business, for while trade in August was more than expected, every one is tired of hanging around waiting for the closing hours, and will welcome the cooler weather and the return of their customers.

Among the wholesalers there has not been so much complaint, for while they were not busy packing orders they could usually keep busy unpacking and handling the stock for which there was no sale.

Various Notes.

Walter Breitenstein, with a party of friends, has gone to the head of the Allegheny, and will spend the next two weeks floating down in canoes, camping at night along the shore.

I. C. GARDENERS' TRIP.

The division gardeners of the Illinois Central railroad, accompanied by several gardeners connected with other roads, are making a tour through the west under the guidance of George B. Molder, of Chicago, chief gardener for the Illinois Central.

In the party, besides G. B. Molder, are the following: H. H. Bode, assistant chief gardener, of Chicago; A. Wagner, of Champaign; A. R. Meade, of Chicago; H. McMahon, of Clinton, Ill.; Val Wicker, of Freeport, Ill.; H. S. Molder, of Fulton, Ky.; W. H. Kellar, of Louisville, Ky., and John Rinck, of New Orleans. These are all division gardeners of the Illinois Central! Others in the party, gardeners for other roads, are: John Gipner, of Niles, Mich.; Patrick Foy, of Roanoke, Va.; E. A. Richardson, of Boston, Mass.; C. H. Tritchler, of Nashville, Tenn.; Robert Rienecke, of New Orleans, La., and E. A. Brooker, city park commissioner, of New Orleans, La.

At Omaha the visitors were entertained by J. J. Hess, of Hess & Swoboda, who is president of the Omaha Florists' Club.

GLEN COVE, N. Y.

The Nassau County Horticultural Society has issued its program and premium list for the second annual exhibition, to be held at Pembroke hall, October 31 and November 1. There are eighty-three classes, thirty-seven of which are for flowers, eight for fruit and twenty for vegetables. In the children's exhibits there are nine classes, in which no children of florists or gardeners will be allowed to enter, and nine in the department for florists' and gardeners' children only.

The officers of the society are: President, Thomas Harrison; vice-president, James Holloway; secretary, A. Mackenzie; treasurer, Ernest J. Brown; executive committee, J. W. Everett, Albert Johnston, Henry Matz, Felix Mense and W. Williston.

WATERTOWN, S. D.—Mr. Nichol is erecting a greenhouse on the north part of town. He is just starting in business here.

ASHTABULA, O.—The Ashtabula Greenhouse Co. is completely rebuilding its greenhouse plant. The new houses will be situated on a hill higher than the former establishment, where drainage was a troublesome question. The glass from the old houses will be used, and a gas engine will be installed.

Various Notes.

Trade the last week was quiet, with not much doing in any line. Roses are coming in, some of good quality, and a few poor carnations are to be seen. Asters are almost a thing of the past.

Everybody here is housing carnations. The plants have lots of young shoots, and are looking fine.

All the boys who attended the Dayton convention speak highly of the treatment they received, and complain only that it was too hot.

Jacob Schulz has nearly completed four houses. They are of the latest pattern.

John Bohrmann's place is in fine shape. His Enchantress carnations, Bride and Maid roses and Boston ferns look especially well.

Frank Gottwald has completed a carnation house and installed a new boiler.

Nanz & Neuner have fine houses of Beauties and Lawson and Enchantress carnations at St. Matthews.

William Mann, on Brook street, has a center bed of cannas and other plants which attract much notice. His Clematis paniculata is a solid mass of white flowers.

Adam Heitz has a fine lot of chrysanthemums, all in 6-inch pots, and in healthy condition. H. L.

Asparagus Crawshawii

A Beautiful Asparagus

Superior to all others in many respects. Shown at Boston Carnation Convention. Rose Convention at same place, and received honorable mention; also New York Florists' Club, New York City, Madison, N.J., and received same. Exhibited in Washington, D. C., Detroit, Mich., and favorably commented upon by men of experience and judgment. A superior Asparagus. Sample spray sent on application. Seedlings, $3.00 per 100; $25.00 per 1000. Transplanted seedlings, $5.00 per 100; $40.00 per 1000.

The Market.

There is no question but that trade on the whole has been much better for August than in previous years. American Beauties and other roses are just beginning to come good, and it is a welcome relief after the poor stuff we have been handling. Asters, which have been in enormous supply, as well as gladioli, have helped out greatly, especially in funeral work, of which there has been an unusual amount lately. Already our best customers are beginning to return from the summer resorts, and it will not be long now before a brisk autumn business will be in order.

Various Notes.

A committee consisting of M. B. Faxon, chairman; Stephens, Woodrow, McKellar and Knopf, is working hard to bring the fall show into shape.

The Ohio state fair, which takes place this week, has filled the city with visitors. An especially good floral exhibition is being made, as the prizes are liberal.

E. G. Hill, of Richmond, Ind., was in town last week, and reports the outlook good for a brisk fall business. The sales of fancy evergreens have been especially good the last month.

George F. Groce, the superintendent of Obentangy park, has devoted a great deal of time and labor to his many beds of cannas. His careful selection of the better kinds has resulted in some grand effects.

Local dealers are preparing for a rush on decorating orders for the occasion of the unveiling of the McKinley memorial, on September 14. There will be many distinguished visitors here at that time, and their entertainment will make things busy for the florists.

Arthur Zirkman, of M. Rice & Co., stopped here on his way from Dayton to Philadelphia.

Joseph H. Cunningham, of Delaware, O., was in the city this week, and reports orders for pansy seed and plants coming in rapidly ZERO.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.—The B. C. Morris Floral Co. reports that business has held up well during the usually dull summer period.

Watch Us Grow

ARAUCARIAS, the best decorative plants Nature produces, our specialty.

Every man in business and life, to be successful, must adopt one thing as his specialty and that specialty, of whatever nature it may be, he must guard, study and push to such an extent that it not only benefits himself but he must continue it so every one who seeks his aid, services or his article, which he advertises or practices, will share a slice of his activity and prosperity. I made the importation and cultivation of araucarias a special study in my life. The figures below will show my success in business from the first year; by commencing with an importation of 250 and now, the eleventh year, my importation has grown up to 6,000 (come and see it), the reason being that the araucaria grows yearly more in favor with the plant consuming people all over the country, as a most admired decorative plant for the parlor, bed-room, dining and sitting-rooms, stores and hotels, lawns and porches. The outlook will be of an importation of at least 8,000 to 10,000 in spring of 1907. To secure this vast amount for 1907, I left Hoboken Aug. 15, striking for Belgium, to make contracts for next year. I shall also bring over with me at the same time a large lot of choice Azalea Indica and Palms, etc., for Christmas and Easter forcing. No money will be spared to secure for my customers the cream of the Belgium greenhouses only.

Please note lowest prices for September.

Araucaria Excelsa, 12 to 14 inches high, 5½-in. pots, 3 to 4 tiers, 2 yrs. old, 50c. 14 to 16 inches high 5½ in. pots, 3 to 4 tiers, 2 yrs. old, 60c. 16 to 18 inches high, 5½ to 6-in. pots, 4 to 5 tiers, 3 yrs. old, 75c. 18 to 20 inches high, 6-in. pots, 5 to 6 tiers, 4 yrs. old, $1.00. 20 to 24 inches high, 6-in. pots, 5 to 6 tiers, 4 yrs. old, $1.25. 36 to 50 inches high, specimens, 7-in. pots, 6 yrs. old, $2.50 to $3.00.

Araucaria Compacta Robusta, have 1000 of them. Never were they as nice as this year. Plants are as broad as long, from 12 to 20 inches in height, 3 to 4 perfect tiers, 20 to 30 inches across from tip of one tier to the other, 3, 4 and 5 yrs. old. 6 to 7-in. pots, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75 to $2.00, up to $3.00 each.

Araucaria Excelsa Glauca, perfect jewels in shape and size, their beautiful greenish blue tiers give them such a striking appearance, that anyone seeing them must fall in love with them on sight. Plants, 6 to 7-in. pots, 3, 4, 5 perfect tiers, 15 to 25 inches in height, from 15 to 30 inches across, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75, $2.00 to $2.50 each. Please bear in mind that the above mentioned varieties are the cream of Belgium's productions. We have thousands of them and can meet all demands.

Kentia Belmoreana, 6-in. pots, 4-year-old, 5 to 6 leaves, bushy, 30 to 35 inches high, $1.25; 5½ to 6-in. pots, 3-year-old, 5 to 6 leaves, 75c to $1.00 each. These are the sizes entered in the customs house.

All goods must travel at purchaser's risk. Cash with order, please.

MANCHESTER, MASS.

The August exhibition of the North Shore Horticultural Society was held on the premises of the Essex Country Club in a commodious tent August 29 and 30. In every respect it was a great success. Exhibits were unusually numerous from the many prominent cottagers. Perfect weather prevailed and the attendance was record-breaking. James McGregor, gardener to Miss A. G. Thayer, won out for the best display of dahlias. Gladioli were remarkably fine, the winning lots being from Mrs. B. F. Tracy and R. C. Hooper, William Swan, gardener. There was a strong entry in the class for the best display of flowers arranged for effect. The first prize, a silver medal, went to Mrs. A. N. Black, Axel Magnuson, gardener; second to R. A. Mitchell. Mrs. S. V. Blake had some fine tuberose, begonias, and was first for 6-inch pots. For twelve vases herbaceous flowers, William Swan was first and James McGregor second.

Perennial phloxes do finely along the north shore and made a grand display. For twelve vases prizes went to Mrs. F. R. Tibbitts and Mrs. Bartlett. James Salter, gardener to Mrs. Philip Dexter, had the best large vase of monthretia; Mrs. C. H. Tweede second. For six ferns in variety, Mrs. G. M. Black was first and Mrs. W. B. Walker, T. Jack, gardener, second. The last named exhibitor won the silver cup offered by R. & J. Farquhar & Co. for the best collection of vegetables.

Herbert Shaw, gardener to Mrs. J. M. Lane, won the prize of $35 in gold offered by Schlegel & Fottler Co. for the largest collection of annuals. We think that exhibitors for these special prizes should at future shows have cards attached to their exhibits certifying that they were grown from the prize-donor's seeds. In the society classes for the best collection of vegetables, James Salter took the silver cup. Mrs. E. C. Swift won second, a bronze medal. The Lord & Burnham silver cup for twenty plants arranged for effect, to be won twice, went this year to William Swan, for a good assortment, including palms, ferns and among other flowering plants some fine Oncidium Rogersii.

H. A. Dreer received honorable mention for a fine collection of aquatics, and W. W. Rawson & Co. had a splendid lot of sweet peas and cactus dahlias.

The judges were J. W. Duncan, Robert Cameron and James Stuart, and they did their work well in the 120 classes.

Greenhouse Heating.

PIPING TWO HOUSES.

I have two houses, one for carnations and one for mixed stock. The houses are connected; the south side is five feet, with twelve inches of glass; the north wall is six and one-half feet. The houses are located on a northeast slope, and are eleven feet to ridge. I have a steam boiler with forty-six 2-inch flues and a dome on top, with 7-inch and 4-inch returns at the bottom of the boiler. It has a 1½-inch and a 2-inch return on the dome.

Being unable to get enough 4-inch pipe in town to enter the houses from the boiler, I had to use 3-inch. I started with a 4-inch nipple eighteen inches long, then a tee with a 3-inch outlet, thence into the houses, running to the northwest corner of the house for mixed stock, thence along the north wall to the east end, thence with a riser to the middle, overhead, then dropping straight down into ¾-inch boiler flues, and returning to the boiler in a 3-inch pipe. I also took a 2-inch flow for the same house and connected it to a 1½-inch opening on the same, and returned to the boiler by a coil of six 1½-inch pipes.

The carnation house has two 2-inch flows, but only one connection from the main, and also returns connected for both coils to a 2-inch pipe, then connected near the boiler to the 3-inch return from the other house. The trouble is that the returns near the boiler, or west end, don't heat up and keep the temperature desired. This house has two coils of seven 1½-inch pipe for returns. Where is my trouble?

I thought I would try either changing the carnation house from two 2-inch flows to one 3-inch, or leaving the flows as they are and connecting each of them separately to the 3-inch main return. Which is the best plan? C. J. L.

You really have more piping in the houses than is necessary to supply the radiation required. If you are not securing satisfactory results, it must be due to the method of installing the pipe.

I do not like the arrangement of the piping, as it throws too much radiation near the center of the houses. You have thirteen 1½-inch pipes through the middle of the room, and only a 4-inch and a 2-inch near one of the exposed sides. Before materially altering the piping try making the far end of the coils a few inches higher than at present, so as to increase the fall in the system. Then with the expansion tank connected to the main return near the boiler elevate it so that the bottom of the tank is twelve or fifteen feet above the highest pipe in the system. Or if you can connect the system with a waterworks system which will afford twenty-five or thirty pounds pressure, use a ¾-inch connection with the main return. If this gives no relief then we will change the arrangement of the pipes. L. C. C.

TYPES OF GAS BURNERS.

As a high-pressure line of 8-inch gas main runs along the front of my place, I have decided to use gas as fuel for my greenhouses, but I am at a loss what kind of burners to use for two Hitchings boilers, Nos. 15 and 16. I went to see two of our wholesale gas fitting firms in town and one suggested open burners, six in each fire-box; the other one just the contrary, a burner where the gas will have to burn through broken fire-bricks. Being a beginner of a few years in business of my own I should like to get the best without paying for experience. M. B.

pipe, which should be a 1-inch pipe, close to the base, through the ash doors, you can use what is called a Jumbo burner, which consists of a large mixer threaded for a 1-inch or ¾-inch supply pipe and a 2-inch pipe above. The air take of the mixer is adjustable so that the draught can be regulated. The burner is usually a home-made affair, consisting of a piece of 2-inch pipe about ten inches long threaded at both ends, one end screwed into the mixer, the other capped. Around the side of the cap drill about six ⅜-inch holes, and then drill fifteen holes in three tiers, one above the other, in the 2-inch pipe large enough to be threaded for ⅜-inch gas pipe. Arrange the holes so that they miss-match. Screw a nipple of ⅜-inch pipe into each opening, making the lower circle of nipples about seven inches long, the next row about five inches long and the top row or those just below the cap about three inches long. This will provide a burner which is economical of fuel and one capable of supplying great heat. The jet of gas admitted by these mixers is usually only about $\frac{1}{8}$ -inch, and it is likely that you will find it necessary to enlarge this opening to about a quarter of an inch. This can be done easily with a common twist drill and a carpenter's brace.

PIPING AND VALVES.

Will you kindly tell me how many 3-inch flows and how many 2-inch returns are necessary to heat a house 22x100 feet in zero weather to about 55 degrees, with hot water? Would it be necessary to have valves in each pipe?

L. G. B.

The house under consideration, 22x100 feet, can be heated by a single 3-inch flow and twelve 2-inch returns. If a single flow is used this should be placed under the ridge.

If you wish to keep all pipes under the benches use fourteen 2-inch pipes, placing five lines under each outside bench and four under the center bench, and use one line of pipe in each coil as a flow, i. e., a flow and four returns under each side bench and a flow and three returns under the center bench. It will not be necessary to place valves in any of the pipes, unless so desired for the purpose of throwing a portion of the radiation out of service during mild weather. If valves are used install only gate valves. Globe valves impede the flow of water and are not desirable. If one line of pipe under each bench is valved it should be sufficient. Valves are, as a rule, not desirable in hot water systems of heating, but are quite essential on extensive steam plants, where the boilers are kept under constant pressure.

TWO CONNECTED HOUSES.

I am building two houses 20x160 feet, 4-foot walls, all boards, double thick, with paper between, and 11-foot ridges. There is no partition between the houses. Will four flows and five returns, all of 2-inch pipe, be sufficient to heat them? My boiler is of 4,300 capacity. Is that large enough?

B. S.

The boiler in question, if its rating is based on square feet of radiation it is capable of carrying, is large enough for the two houses in question. The piping will be found insufficient in severe weaththey readily be attached to the 4-inch cast-iron pipes, and how? Also kindly give the number and size of pipes to heat the two new houses, for 30 degrees below zero weather, and the best arrangement of them.

F. B.

The house 20x100 feet can be heated by hot water, using 2-inch wrought-iron pipe, if a 3-inch flow is carried from the boiler to the house and then divided to supply three coils, one under each of the benches, each coil to consist of a supply or flow pipe from the 3-inch main and three 2-inch returns under each side bench, and a flow and four returns under the center bench, thus making thirteen lines of pipes the length of the house. As the violet house undoubtedly has the beds on the ground, it can be heated by carrying a 2½-inch main flow pipe from the boiler to the house and there dividing it to supply two 2-inch flows, one on either side wall of the house. On the most exposed side of the house arrange the supply to feed three 2-inch returns. On the sheltered side arrange the flow to feed two 2-inch returns. This will give seven lines of pipe the length of the house, four on one side and three on the other.

I do not advise attempting to connect the main flow of either of these houses into the heating pipes leading to any other house or houses. Make connections direct with the boiler or with a manifold on top of the boiler, by using the proper cast-iron ells or tees, into which the wrought-iron pipes can be caked.

L. C. C.

NATURAL GAS VS. COAL.

Will you please give us your opinion as to which is the cheaper fuel, natural gas at 15 cents per thousand feet or Pittsburgh run of mine coal at $2.50 per ton?

S. & Y.

You can judge for yourself which will be most economical for you. It is estimated that 30,000 cubic feet of gas is equal to one ton of the best coal, or that coal at $4.50 per ton is equal to gas at 15 cents per thousand. You must set against this the cost of firing, removing ashes, etc., which is chargeable to coal and not to gas.

L. C. C.

SIZE OF FLOW PIPES.

Please let me know what size cross-header it will take from a 3-inch flow to supply four 1¼-inch hot water returns under each of four benches.

S. S.

Each of the branches to supply the four manifolds of 1¼-inch pipe should be of 2-inch pipe. If you use a cross-header such as you describe, this should be of 3-inch pipe, the same as the main flow, as far as the take-off for the two inside coils; from that point on it can be reduced in size to two inches to supply the outside coils.

L. C. C.

TYPES OF BOILERS.

I want to provide for the heating of three houses each 20x100, with 6-foot walls and 13-foot ridges. What will be best, a boiler of the Kroeschell No. 3 type, or a fire-box boiler seven and one-half feet long and thirty-six inches wide? A firm has offered me the latter boiler, telling me it will heat 2,200 feet of radiation. I can figure only 1,900 feet.

H. G. B.

The three houses you purpose to erect will require a boiler with capacity for supplying heat to about 2,500 square feet of radiation, and for this purpose it would not be wise to purchase a boiler with a rated capacity of less than 3,000 square feet. The fire-box or locomotive type of boiler is not desirable for greenhouse use, as it is not one of the most economical types of boilers. The hori-

HEATING BY PRESSURE.

Some time ago I put in an upright tubular boiler eight feet six inches high, and my pit was only about seven feet, so that the top of the boiler is a little over a foot above the level of my greenhouse floor. My overhead system of circulation is slow, and I have decided to put it under pressure, and would be obliged to you if you would tell me just what is necessary to make the change, the placing of safety valves, etc. Our water pressure is about seventy

As fast as old grate bars are burned out many growers are putting in the Martin rocking grate. to ridge, south wall glass for twenty-four inches. Any information you can give me regarding this matter will be greatly appreciated. W. L. F.

If your piping is sufficient to withstand the seventy pounds pressure, all you have to do is to provide air cocks at the highest points, plug all safety valves and other openings and connect the city pressure to the main return near the boiler. If the system will not stand the seventy pounds, and you cannot secure the desired pressure from an elevated expansion tank connected at the same point, place a reducing valve in the service pipe and use such pressure as is necessary to secure the desired results. L. C. C.

CONNECTING EXPANSION TANK

I intend to use hot water for heating our greenhouse. The expansion tank will be twelve feet above the boiler. Where shall I make the connection, with the pipe that feeds the coils or with the return pipe? L. F. B.

It will be better to make the connection for the expansion tank on the main return near the boiler, unless you intend to use the pressure for an elevated supply tank, both for supply and expansion, or to utilize city pressure in this fashion, which can be satisfactorily done if the pressure is not more than fifty or sixty pounds. L. C. C.

MAKING RETURNS LOWER.

Will I gain anything by changing my returns so that they enter the boiler at the bottom? They now enter the top, seven feet below the greenhouse floor. A drop of fourteen feet would result if they entered the bottom. E. G.

No advantage could be gained by dropping the returns below the shell of the boiler. If all returns save the single one carrying the water to the opening on the under side of the boiler can be kept above the water level in the boiler, if a steam boiler, greater efficiency will be secured. L. C. C.

boiler to the house and then divided to supply three coils, one under each of the benches, each coil to consist of a supply or flow pipe from the 3-inch main and three 2-inch returns under each side bench, and a flow and four returns under the center bench, thus making thirteen lines of pipes the length of the house. As the violet house undoubtedly has the beds on the ground, it can be heated by carrying a 2½-inch main flow pipe from the boiler to the house and there dividing it to supply two 2-inch flows, one on either side wall of the house. On the most exposed side of the house arrange the supply to feed three 2-inch returns. On the sheltered side arrange the flow to feed two 2-inch returns. This will give seven lines of pipe the length of the house, four on one side and three on the other.

I do not advise attempting to connect the main flow of either of these houses into the heating pipes leading to any other house or houses. Make connections direct with the boiler or with a manifold on top of the boiler, by using the proper cast iron elbows or tees, into which the wrought iron pipes can be caked.

L. C. C.

NATURAL GAS VS. COAL.

Will you please give us your opinion as to which is the cheaper fuel, natural gas at 15 cents per thousand feet or Pittsburg run of mine coal at $2.50 per ton?

S. & Y.

You can judge for yourself which will be most economical for you. It is estimated that 30,000 cubic feet of gas is equal to one ton of the best coal, or that coal at $4.50 per ton is equal to gas at 15 cents per thousand. You must set against this the cost of firing, removing ashes, etc., which is chargeable to coal and not to gas.

L. C. C.

SIZE OF FLOW PIPES.

Please let me know what size cross-header it will take from a 3-inch flow to supply four 1½ inch hot water returns under each of four benches.

S. S.

Each of the branches to supply the four manifolds of 1½-inch pipe should be of 2-inch pipe. If you use a cross-header such as you describe, this should be of 3-inch pipe, the same as the main flow, as far as the take-off for the two inside coils; from that point on it can be reduced in size to two inches to supply the outside coils.

L. C. C.

TYPES OF BOILERS.

I want to provide for the heating of three houses each 20x100, with 6-foot walls and 13-foot ridges. What will be best, a boiler of the Kroeschell No. 3 type, or a fire-box boiler seven and one-half feet long and thirty-six inches wide? A firm has offered me the latter boiler, telling me it will heat 2,200 feet of radiation. I can figure only 1,900 feet.

H. G. B.

The three houses you propose to erect will require a boiler with capacity for supplying heat to about 2,500 square feet of radiation, and for this purpose it would not be wise to purchase a boiler with a rated capacity of less than 3,000 square feet. The fire-box or locomotive type of boiler is not desirable for greenhouse use, as it is not one of the most economical types of boilers. The hori-

HEATING BY PRESSURE.

Some time ago I put in an upright tubular boiler eight feet six inches high, and my pit was only about seven feet, so that the top of the boiler is a little over a foot above the level of my greenhouse floor. My overhead system of circulation is slow, and I have decided to put it under pressure, and would be obliged to you if you would tell me just what is necessary to make the change, the placing of safety valves, etc.
Our water pressure is about seventy

Great Grates.

As fast as old grate bars are burned out many growers are putting in the Martin rocking grate. The call for this grate is largely increased by the fact that the growers who have used it for one or more seasons are almost without exception equipping other boilers with it. The grate costs considerably more than the stationary bars, but is figured to make a decided saving in fuel, and that is what all the growers are after.

Various Notes.

The Florists' Review has a fairly well attended meeting July 12. A goodly portion is promised for Dayton. Both reached home July to ridge, south wall glass for twenty-four inches. Any information you can give me regarding this matter will be greatly appreciated. W. L. F.

If your piping is sufficient to withstand the seventy pounds pressure, all you have to do is to provide air cocks at the highest points, plug all safety valves and other openings and connect the city pressure to the main return near the boiler. If the system will not stand the seventy pounds, and you cannot secure the desired pressure from an elevated expansion tank connected at the same point, place a reducing valve in the service pipe and use such pressure as is necessary to secure the desired results. L. C. C.

CONNECTING EXPANSION TANK

I intend to use hot water for heating our greenhouse. The expansion tank will be twelve feet above the boiler. Where shall I make the connection, with the pipe that feeds the coils or with the return pipe? L. F. B.

It will be better to make the connection for the expansion tank on the main return near the boiler, unless you intend to use the pressure for an elevated supply tank, both for supply and expansion, or to utilize city pressure in this fashion, which can be satisfactorily done if the pressure is not more than fifty or sixty pounds. L. C. C.

MAKING RETURNS LOWER.

Will I gain anything by changing my returns so that they enter the boiler at the bottom? They now enter the top, seven feet below the greenhouse floor. A drop of fourteen feet would result if they entered the bottom. E. G.

No advantage could be gained by dropping the returns below the shell of the boiler. If all returns save the single one carrying the water to the opening on the under side of the boiler can be kept above the water level in the boiler, if a steam boiler, greater efficiency will be secured. L. C. C.

The Market.

Business shows a little increase over last week, and from the number of orders already booked for the coming week it will show a still healthier tone. It will not be long now until the regular fall trade starts up. With the advent of the chrysanthemum, the beginning of our season's business always comes, and from general reports we will have the mum with us a little earlier this year than usual. The weather conditions have been good for them, and have helped them along nicely.

Roses and carnations are now coming in larger quantities and of better quality. Some very good Beauties are to be seen, and they meet a ready demand. Good white roses sell quickly. White carnations also take the lead. Asters are still with us in large numbers, but the end is in sight and before another week their numbers will be greatly diminished. Gladioli are selling a little better, but still they do not bring a paying price.

Various Notes.

Albert Grey, who is associated with his father in the Ohio Cut Flower Co., states that he will leave in a short time for Flagstaff, Arizona, where he will try a little ranch life. C. J. OHMER.

DETROIT.

The Market.

The month of August has been a record-breaker. With the exception of August, 1881, it was the hottest in this city's history. This, of course, drove all the fortunate ones to the cooler spots, putting a damper on business, and it seems to be still on, in spite of cooler weather.

Stock remains about the same in price. Brides and Maids have improved since last week. Good roses of any variety are always in demand, but the shorter grades hang fire. Asters are decidedly poor and as a result many thousands find their way to the ash barrel.

Various Notes.

This being state fair week, most of the florists have taken a day off to take in the fair.

Visitors last week were Mrs. John M. Foss and Miss Caroline Lease, of Etna, Pa.; Mrs. H. Stone, of Sharpsburg, Pa.; George F. Struck, with Lager & Hurrell, of Summit, N. J.; C. M. Dickinson, of E. H. Hunt's, Chicago, and R. Vick, of New Decatur, Ala. H. S.

Making it heat a greenhouse is another, for heating a greenhouse is not a matter of the mere installation of a boiler and laying pipe. Painting.

Possibly there is no time of year when the plant growers' benches are so vacant as this month and the next. There should, with an up-to-date florist, never be empty benches, but our Boston ferns, summer-grown carnations and chrysanthemums are yet small, and it is easy to build a scaffold over them and paint the inside of your houses. It is warm work, to be sure, but it is well worth the perspiration and labor involved. Don't expect the boys to work in a temperature of 111 degrees with the sun glaring through the glass in their eyes. A movable shade of canvas easily can be moved along as the work progresses. A house newly painted inside is practically a new house, as regards light and health of plants, as well as destroying the resting spores of fungi and hosts of eggs of destructive insects. Altogether it is worth far more than the cost in material and labor.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

Again Mr. Scott Hits the Nail on the Head

So get busy painting—but first know what you're painting with. About half you florists think that any high-grade white lead is O. K. but you're way wrong, for greenhouse conditions are not like other conditions under which such white leads are successful, because the alternate dryness and moisture and the blistering, sweltering heat of the summer's sun causes cracks, mildew and peeling. We used to have no end of trouble with leads in these ways, so we determined to overcome them, and went into this lead matter in a pretty serious sort of way—got right to the bottom of it with the aid of the best paint chemist the country affords—made the severest possible tests—now we have a lead that's made for greenhouse work by our own process—it meets the conditions perfectly—it makes the lead that makes the "Stay Put" Paint.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS.

Spraying.

As the days grow cooler, less spraying of the plants is necessary, and one good syringing on bright days is sufficient, because the plants are now in heavy growth and the foliage remains wet for a long while after spraying.

Conditions are very different to what they were a month ago, when plants would dry in a few minutes after they had been sprayed. Now we have cooler weather and less evaporation. If there is any shade on the house it should be removed, for this is the month when every effort should be made to ripen up the wood. To accomplish this the plants should have all the sunlight possible.

Ripening the Wood.

After the bud is taken and the stem is thickening, the latter should begin to "bark up" at the base, and get away from the green, soft appearance that characterizes the plants during their summer growth.

It is all very well to have the foliage hanging over the bench. It makes a fine-looking house of plants, but if you are losing leaves at the bottom of your plant by the natural ripening of the wood, you have no cause for worry, and you will beat the other fellow out in the quality of the flowers. If your plants are very soft and gross, less water both at the root and in the atmosphere is the quickest way to harden them up. Immense foliage does not necessarily mean immense flowers, as an excess of nitrogen in the feeding will produce the foliage, while the flower would come poor colored, very soft and lacking much in depth and finish. Evenly balanced fertilizers and an everyday study of the condition of the plants enable the expert grower to produce both immense flowers and foliage, but this can only be obtained by getting the wood into the right condition of ripeness.

CHARLES H. TOTTY.

WHITE ANTS.

We are troubled with white ants in our chrysanthemum beds. They gather around the roots of a plant, sometimes eating the bark and sometimes boring up the center of the stem, either way destroying the plant. Can you or any of your readers give a way to exterminate them without injuring the plants? Any information on the subject will be greatly appreciated. G. C.

Ants have not been any bother to me personally, so I fear I cannot help you very much, but I well recall that when I was a boy starting in to learn the gardening business, and incidentally picking up many other experiences which neither "touched on nor appertained to" the profession, we were taught to consider the best things to clean out ants in a greenhouse were toads, and these were captured and placed in the greenhouse whenever we found them around. That toads will eat ants is well known, and if you could find a few and put them in the greenhouse your troubles would possibly cease.

Failing the toads, I have read somewhere of a way of poisoning ants by mixing arsenic and sugar, and dropping it along the runs of the ants, also of mixing calomel and sugar and using it the same way. A dusting of air-slaked lime has taken care of any ants that I have run across. C. H. TOTTY.

NEW ASPARAGUSES.

In a recent issue a subscriber makes the following inquiry: What is the nature of Asparagus myriocladus, also can it be propagated by means of cuttings? If so, when and how should it be done?

Asparagus myriocladus is a native of South Africa and is very much like Asparagus Sprengeri in habit but more erect in growth, with a finer leaf and far more attractive as an ornamental plant.

It makes an excellent plant for pots, as it forms fronds from two to four feet long which, when just unfolding, are of a peculiar bronze color, from which they change to a golden green and when mature to a rich emerald green. This species can be propagated either by seeds, division, layerage or from cuttings. For cuttings take medium strong, healthy shoots and make a cut just beneath the joint of each leaf; cover these split places on the stem beneath the sand in the fashion that you layer a branch. The most convenient plan is to place them in pans over which a large pane of glass should be placed to maintain a moist, warm temperature. Under these conditions it will root readily. Asparagus tenuissimus is also easily propagated in this way. Asparagus plumosus and Asparagus Sprengeri are mostly grown from seed.

In this connection it may be of interest to call attention to some of the other newer varieties of asparagus which are valuable: Asparagus plumosus Blampiedi (Market Queen), Asparagus Sieberianus, which is excellent for cutting; Asparagus comorensis, which is very fine for design work; Asparagus crispus, and Asparagus Duchieni, which bears very large foliage of a deep green color. All of these are of a climbing habit of growth and are useful greenhouse plants.

JULIUS ERDMANN.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Cyclamen.

It is now time to sow cyclamen for early and large plants for the winter of 1907. I have recently received a startling revelation on growing cyclamen, and I must preface these hints on the subject by telling you that I had last week a call from Mr. Robinson, of Montreal. I made this gentleman's acquaintance some seven years ago. From the order and success of the beautiful garden under his charge and the most sensible paper he read before the meeting of the Canadian Horticultural Society, I classed him as one of the most up-to-date and thorough gardeners on the continent, regardless of latitude or longitude. It was this bright Mr. Robinson who imparted to me the method he follows in producing grand cyclamen. It is radical in comparison to our old methods. With some more definite information and Mr. Robinson's permission I hope in a future issue to give you the complete modus operandi. But I can give now the important item of how to begin.

Instead of sowing the seeds broadcast but thinly in a flat or pan, place the seeds one inch apart. The reason and wisdom of this will be noticed later. Of course, no one will think that the inch must be exact. An eighth of an inch either way will make no difference, but let it be more rather than less. The flats should be three inches deep, filled with a decomposed turfy loam, to which should be added a fourth of thoroughly rotten cow manure or sifted leaf-mold. A slight covering of pure sand on the surface is advisable, as the seeds germinate better in the sand than in the soil.

The above is all I intend to give you at present. I have every confidence in the method. Some conservative men will say, "I grow good cyclamen with successive shiftings." To them I will say try a hundred or two on Mr. Robinson's plan. Sow the seeds at once one inch apart in flats. It will be three months before you have to transplant them.

Hardy Perennials.

This and the few following weeks is the best time to transplant and divide most all the well-known hardy perennials, or make plantings of the young plants sown in spring. The summer growth is ripe, the roots are inactive and a transplanting is little felt. Especially is this true with the popular peony. Peonies will do well for a number of years in one spot if kept free from weeds and grass, but transplanting is often a necessity just for the sake of a thorough cleaning. You will see a peony doing well and profusely flowering, surrounded with sod. Possibly the short cut sod has taken little from the soil.

Peonies.

I am not ashamed to own that we have about one-fifth of an acre planted with peonies which flowered well for several years, but has become the last two years a most neglected spot. I suppose other work was deemed more important. In the midst of weeds they flowered only a little a year ago, and last spring, being infested with every species of weed hardy in this latitude, there were no flowers at all. So this gross-feeding, robust plant can be vanquished by the still more vigorous native wild plants. It is simply a case of survival of the fittest, not the survival of that which most pleases man, but survival of those that best suit their environments, and so it is with all our attractive, herbaceous, hardy plants. They must be kept clean and cultivated, or don't attempt to grow them.

Peonies should have a deep, rich soil, and if it is moist throughout the dry summers, so much the better. They should be planted four feet apart each way, so that a horse cultivator can do the work on all sides of each plant. Then the hand weeding in the crown of the plant becomes light labor.

Roman Hyacinths.

You have had your Roman hyacinths several weeks now. Don't delay in getting them into flats three inches deep, and the flats covered with four inches of light soil, tanbark or some such material. Remember that in addition to the good soaking before the flats are could tell a story about the loss of a few thousand fine celery plants that were frozen in the basement of a barn, but the pages of the REVIEW are too valuable to be reminiscent, and I shall merely say that I am positive we have seen come up with life and growth in the spring the tubers of the potato, the corms of gladioli and the rhizomes of Canna Indica that had undoubtedly been frozen during winter, and had we attempted to save them and brought them into a warm greenhouse or shed they quickly would have rotted, but Mother Earth slowly and naturally thawed them out.

For two or three years we have had a good demand for 6-inch or 7-inch pans of Roman hyacinths for Christmas. They are quite pretty and sweet; they adapt themselves to some dainty trimming and find a ready sale at popular prices. The 6-inch half pot is better than either pot or pan. Plant them now or very soon. As you will be bringing them in about November 1, a covering of three inches will be sufficient. This may seem early with a bulb that flowers so early and easily. They have much better, stouter and stiffer flower stalks when forced slowly. Don't plant what are now sold commercially as Dutch Roman hyacinths. They will not force for Christmas, and are not Romans at all. They are merely small but mature bulbs of the true Dutch hyacinth, and will not force any earlier than the large named varieties of the Dutch hyacinth. Don't be penurious or covering of any kind. Sink the bulbs an inch below the surface of the soil, and place the pots on a bench. When growth appears above the soil, 55 to 60 degrees at night will suit them, and plenty of daylight.

I think this sweet, graceful flower is stronger in favor than it was ten years ago, and if not sold by the dozen it is always useful in designs. Some growers plant it along the edge of a carnation bed, or among the plants. The carnations may not suffer, but it is poor treatment for the freesia. It is like attempting to fatten a hog on skim milk, coffee grounds and tea leaves, which I saw a relative of mine once try. The animal grew to weigh 415 pounds, but the pork, which I sampled, had a very Mongolian flavor.

The freesia is worth a bench, such a bench as you would use for carnations or mignonette. Four inches of soil is enough. Plant one inch apart in the rows, and the rows four inches apart, a few hundred at once, and the same every month. The bulbs are not hurt by being kept dry for months, and those sold by our leading seedsmen nowadays are not only great in quality but very inexpensive.

I once wrote that it was cheaper to buy new bulbs of freesia than to bother with those you had flowered. This we have found to be a mistake. If you leave the bulbs in the bed until the foliage is ripe, and then lift them, they will give you better flowers than the largest bulbs you can buy. Doubtful whether I was much in error, still I thank the gentlemen who promptly called me down, and should appreciate more calling down. I don't get enough of it to suit. More would make me a wiser and better man. WILLIAM SCOTT.

THE ROSS PLACE.

The accompanying illustrations are from photographs taken a few days ago at the establishment of J. W. Ross, Centralia, Ill., a good, live town in the center of a prosperous section where greenhouse establishments are unusually few and far between. Mr. Ross has 22,000 feet of glass, all built within two years, and finds himself still unable to meet the demand.

The houses are Dietsch pattern, connected, without partition walls except between rose and carnation houses, seven-eighths of the place being devoted to these staples. The plants are in solid beds. Steam heat is used.

The view in the carnation house shows Enchantress and Prosperity. In the rose house Richmond, Bride and Bridesmaid were planted about June 15.

TULIPS FOR FORCING.

Please tell me whether Ophir d'Or and Prince de Ligne are good tulips for forcing? Which variety do you advise me to take for early and which for Easter forcing? L. V. L.

We have never forced either of the varieties mentioned, which are both early single yellow. I do not advise you to try these varieties. Why not stick to the well-known varieties, which after years of experience have been found to be most satisfactory? Here is a brief list of forcing tulips which cannot be beaten, and which the Hollanders grow in large quantities for the American trade: Yellow Prince, yellow; Chrysocovered, they should be examined occasionally, and if found dry should receive a thorough soaking, enough to go through the covering into the soil of the flats, for if dry at the roots little development of root or top will be made.

Unlike the Paper White narcissus, which is killed by exposure, the Roman hyacinth will endure a good, hard frost, both the exposed growth and that beneath the covering of soil, tanbark or ashes, but you must never handle the plants when frozen. Wait for a thaw. Like many of our hardy culinary vegetables and some of our thought-to-be tender, flowering, tuberous-rooted plants, if left to thaw out naturally in the ground frost does not hurt them. I over the bulbs. Put them not farther apart than two inches from center to center. That will give you a handsome pan, and will more than repay for the few extra bulbs.

Freesias.

Another little bulb that makes a handsome show in winter and spring is the freesia. A great quantity of these is not wanted at any particular time, but a succession should be kept up. I prefer a 5-inch or 6-inch pot to a pan for these fragrant flowers. Plant thickly in the pots one inch apart; no more. Then you will have something that will catch everybody's eye. Of course, you know that freesias want no putting outside lora, deep yellow; Vermilion Brilliant, scarlet, very fine; Waterloo, deep scarlet; La Reine, white; Pottebakker White, white; Cottage Maid, pink; Rose Grisdelin, pink; Keizerskroon, large red with yellow edge.

There are any number of early single tulips of many shades of color, but in forcing tulips you want only decided colors; the above are good ones for that.

In double tulips, especially for Easter use, there are two varieties that stand out above all others. They are: Murillo, opening white and in a few days turning to a beautiful silky pink; Couronne d'Or, a grand golden yellow. Both of the above make splendid pans, and are equally fine for cutting. W. GUDES' WESTERN TRIP.

William F. Gude and Adolphus Gude, the well-known Washingtonians, made a western trip in August, the objective point being Red Mountain, Colorado. While with a special party, on pleasure bent, in private cars, the brothers are too deeply interested in flowers and florists not to visit those in the trade when opportunity presented. Being asked for a brief account of what he saw, W. F. Gude spoke in part as follows:

"We left Washington August 11 and arrived in Denver early in the morning of August 14. We naturally fell in with that genial, whole-souled president of the Park Floral Co., J. A. Valentine, who promptly asked for a few hours of our time, and, having time to spend, were willing subjects. I might say while in Mr. Valentine's place of business we were shown some dahlias the like of which we never had seen before. We were naturally interested to know where these dahlias grew, and a few minutes afterwards were in an automobile being taken through a most interesting section of the city of Denver, and five miles northwest through some of the most fertile fields that it ever was our pleasure to behold.

"In a short while we were on the grounds of W. W. Wilmore, a former resident of Laurel, Md., many years ago. Here at Mr. Wilmore's place the beauty and perfection of all his flowers that he cultivates is simply unexcelled, but particularly so his dahlia industry, which from our observation seemed to be perfection itself. The following are varieties particularly worthy of mention:

"Bon Ton he considers the best dark red, and Lyndhurst an excellent red or scarlet. In white, Snow and Glori de Lyon both are good. He considers Kriemhilde a most desirable pink cactus, and the old deep pink A. D. Livoni still is a general favorite, but he predicts that both of these will have to take a back seat when Mme. Von Den Dael is fairly before the public. This he considers the grandest thing yet sent out in pink, but the stock has been too scarce for it to become generally known. It should have a slight shade in this climate to bring the flowers to perfection. Queen of Yellows and Miss Dodd both are good yellows. Twentieth Century has proven to be a valuable and striking variety for florists' use, but it is about the only single that is much in demand here. Mrs. Winters is a magnificent white for the garden, but wilts easily and on that account is not a valuable florists' flower.

"He mentions two other new varieties which he confidently predicts have come to stay. Navajo, a very dark red of decorative form, too dark for florists' purposes but just right for others; and Umatilla, a red with long stem and fine flowers. A green freak noticed is named Verdiflora and is as perfectly formed a green flower as we have ever beheld in any other color.

"It might be well to state that these beautiful fertile acres were a barren waste before Mr. Wilmore took hold of them, but by the introduction and perfect control of the irrigation system Mr. Wilmore has converted it into a model commercial floral and fruit farm, for the flavor of those juicy apples dished out to us in the form of a liquid, was as pleasing to the taste as the beauty to the eye. In all, the home of Wilmore with his sturdy family, his whole-souled greeting, his kind hospitality and his heartfelt 'Come again,' makes one feel proud to be a florist, and that such men as W. W. Wilmore are in the business to grow flowers to such perfection as we saw them here.

"Leaving Mr. Wilmore's place laden with arms full of his choice flowers, we stopped at the Union depot to leave them in our cars. The members of our party were all eastern people and they declared that they never had seen such specimens.

"We next drove through the principal streets of the city, where we were shown lawns and window-boxes to perfection; then to the Park Floral Co. greenhouses, where everything that we saw was up-to-date and in fine condition; then through the extensive park system, with its zoological park, boulevards, lakes and drives, second to none in the point of beauty and artistic arrangement. Reaching the far end of the park we suddenly discovered that it was nearly time for our train to leave and beat a hurried retreat for the Union depot to join our party to go farther west, after spending one of the most pleasant and profitable of days.

"Having always been in favor of our national convention reaching out, I feel now more than ever that one of the best moves the society could make would be to hold a convention in Denver in the near future.

"In the midst of the Rocky Mountains we were again impressed by the clear color and wonderful beauty of the columbine, which grows wild in great profusion on the mountain tops, also the forget-me-nots of vivid blue, growing in the highest altitude, far above the timber line. At Colorado Springs and Manitou, we also noticed that the western people put forth more effort in producing beautiful lawns and gardens than do our eastern people."

CARNATIONS

FALL TREATMENT.

I have a greenhouse stocked with carnations, and I find that in the short days of winter the dwelling house shades the morning sun, and the barn shades the evening sun, so that on clear days the house only gets sun from 9 o'clock till 4 o'clock. How should I treat these plants? Should I top any after they are planted in? I want a full crop for Christmas. Last year I kept them topped back about a month after benching, and they didn't flower much till the last of January. Pink Lawson and Enchantress are the kinds I have the most of. How should I treat them under the shaded conditions? D. & S.

If your carnations get the full sun from 9 until 4 o'clock during the shortest days, you should have little trouble in getting a fair crop of blooms from them. Up to 9 a. m. the sun has but little strength, and after 4 p. m. it amounts to little during December, January and February. There are few if any changes you can make in the treatment beyond close attention in watering and ventilating. Both of these require careful attention during midwinter anyway.

I do not advise you to top the plants back now any more, if they are fairly well branched. Your crop for Christmas should be in full swing if you have the plants established now, and starting up a crop of blooming shoots. Let them come right along. If any of the plants are starting up a number of shoots, so that no short shoots remain on the plants to follow later, you can prolong the crop by topping back a part of these blooming shoots. Of course, the cut will be lighter, but it will be steadier through the season, which oftentimes is more desirable than an extra heavy crop of short duration. A. F. J. B.

LATE PLANTING.

We are going to build a carnation house, but cannot get it finished until October 1. Can we pot field-grown plants now and transplant them to the benches by October 10 successfully? What size pots do you suggest? Any other information will be thankfully received.

E. D.

Yes, you can work the plan you suggest to good advantage, only the potting should have been done a month ago to get the best results. Then the plants would become thoroughly established in the pots before being transplanted in the beds, and the check would amount to practically nothing. If potted now they will hardly become pot-bound before they will have to be replanted. But in spite of that it will be far better than to leave them in the field until October. You will have a good crop of blooms much earlier, although you may not make it for Christmas.

If potted by August 20 a good crop could be had by the holidays. Use as small a pot as will hold the roots comfortably. I suggest 4-inch and 5-inch pots, according to the size of the plants and roots. The 4-inch will hold anything except the largest of plants. Take off the shoots that have run up much, but after that let them come. No cutting back need be done when planting from the pots into the bed, as the check will be too slight to affect the blooming shoots any. Use a tolerably light soil for the potting, so the roots will work through it as quickly as possible.

A. F. J. B.

TIME FOR GLAZING.

I planted some carnations in a new house I am building about August 20. The house is not yet glazed. Would it be better to get the glass on as quickly as possible, or will they do just as well if I put the glazing off until later? Should the buds that are on the plants now be pinched off? B. A. B.

There is no special hurry about getting the glass on your new house as long as the weather remains warm, but you will do well to get it on before any frosts occur. If the plants are growing well they will be benefited by the cool outside atmosphere. While a few degrees of frost will not injure the growth of a carnation plant, it will injure a flower bud materially. In our climate I should consider the latter half of this month a good time to put on the glass. You will find that the stems will come longer when the glass is on, and you will want to give them a little time to get accustomed to the changed conditions before winter sets in. I don't know how large your house is, or how long it will take to glaze it, so I will say, don't put it off too long.

ROSES

REQUIREMENTS OF ROSES.

[A paper by John H. Dunlop, of Toronto, read before the Canadian Horticultural Association at Guelph, Ont., August 30, 1906.]

The subject assigned me, or that I am asked to speak upon, is one of considerable magnitude, "A Review of Roses to Present Date, and Their Requirements." At first glance it would seem an easy task, but as one analyzes the subject, the first question to confront you is, are all soils alike? Are all conditions similar? Do all growers handle their plants in a similar manner? The answer to each of these questions is a positive "No." Then in that case the paper will deal entirely with the conditions, soil, etc., as existing at my greenhouses, and as far as I am able to learn through intercourse with those growing the varieties enumerated, and of the forcing varieties now grown under glass for cut flowers.

Difficulties in Rose Culture.

The rose growers have not been favored, as other branches of the profession have, in the number of varieties put upon the market or disseminated by originators each season. Look at the list of carnations and chrysanthemums; in fact, the number of varieties that have remained permanent or standard forcing varieties have been comparatively few.

There are so many points required in a rose to make it profitable; probably it is a good grower, but the color may not be right; the flower may be too single, or too double to open freely; in winter it may have a tendency to be weak-stemmed in dark weather, or a shy bloomer at the same season. There are so many points to be considered in a forcing variety, that there are few that come up to the requirements of the ideal flower.

Look back for the last ten years, which is a comparatively short time, and note how many varieties have been introduced, with glowing descriptions, and how many are grown today. The majority have been tested, found wanting and discarded, as the critical public, to whose taste we cater, are capable of judging the variety, and are not slow to detect the weak points. No matter how much we want to grow them, the patrons of our stores have to be considered, and it is the popularity of the variety that we have to look to. But there is a better day coming; a good many of the supposed forcing varieties may have excellent points when grown in the open, and may be admirably adapted to outdoor cultivation; and I think this is the part that is misleading. Almost all of the new varieties are raised in Europe, where the conditions are entirely different and unlike the requirements of this country, but I am sanguine of better things. Have we not men who feel the necessity and have the courage to risk the raising of seedlings, who are spending time and money in the endeavor to give us something more and better suited to our requirements, who know the conditions and, I am proud to say, have achieved success and have overcome obstacles that have appeared unsurmountable?

Have we not John Cook, of Baltimore, who gave us Cornelia Cook and Wootton, Alex. Montgomery, with Wellesley, E. G. Hill, with General MacArthur and Richmond? During the last week a visit was paid to this noted establishment, and there he has a house 300 feet in length devoted to this year's seedlings, and seedlings of one and two years in limited quantities, under extended trial. We should be proud of such men, who have the perseverance and skill to devote to this very important branch of our profession.

A Review of Varieties.

Of the most recent introductions, and what might be claimed the most important forcing varieties, I should name Richmond, originated by E. G. Hill, of Richmond, Ind. This is an American seedling, a cross between Lady Battersea and Liberty. It is a hybrid tea, with a much larger percentage of tea blood than most of the hybrid teas. The color is an ideal shade of bright crimson, delicately scented, and it is of remarkably free growth and a free bloomer. This variety can be grown successfully with Bride or Maid; in fact, it is benefited by a few degrees less heat, and a night temperature of 55 degrees suits it better than 58 degrees. It does not require any particular culture or soil, as it has been grown successfully in both light and moderately heavy soils, but I recommend a clay loam, where it is procurable, as I am inclined to think that there is more substance found in the flowers where the heavier soil is used. I want to caution growers not to be too liberal in feeding Richmond. It was recommended at the time of dissemination to feed it liberally, but as I said before, some soils being stronger and richer than others, caution and care must be exercised in feeding, or disaster will be the result. I had a house of this variety last season where the instructions were carried out too closely, and the result was that the variety got indigestion and had to be handled very carefully in order to put it in good working order again. There is nothing to be gained in this; better be cautious and give a little underfeeding rather than overfeeding.

Madame Chatenay is a comparatively new variety, but has found many admirers. It is of easy culture, being one of the strongest growing teas, and easy to force, and like Richmond it is not particular as to soil. We have found a temperature of 55 degrees well suited. The variety takes well to feeding, and in the early spring does well with frequent waterings of liquid manure and a good mulch as the days grow longer. The color is of a soft, peach pink on the upper side of the petal, and a lighter shade on the under side. It has a delicate perfume.

Killarney is a variety that has been neglected or overlooked. It originated with Dickson, of Belfast. Although on the market for some three years, its merits were not brought out till a year or so ago, when it was grown in different sections in moderate quantities and the value became known. Now it is being largely grown, with excellent results, as you will note from the reports in the trade papers last season. It is a free grower, and has a fascinating appearance, from the fact that the young growth is so showy, being a reddish plum color in contrast to the deep green of the matured foliage. The stems are stiff and erect at all seasons of the year. The bud is pointed and delicately scented, and produced in profusion. The color is a deep shade of rose pink, although I have seen it different in some sections, being of a light, wash pink. The odor is of the briar. When the hand is passed over the unopened bud it is like the odor of a briar hedge, which is always refreshing and appreciated. A similar temperature to Bride and Maid is best suited to Killarney.

Kate Moulton has only been disseminated, and in its first year's trial, so its faults, if any, have not been discovered. I had a bunch sent me from Minneapolis, Minn., which arrived in good condition, considering the long journey. It is of a soft shade of pink, globular in form, with good stem, although the neck was inclined to be weak. Whether that is a fault or not is yet to be seen. The variety appears to be a good grower.

Wellesley, although on the market a couple of years, has not been grown around Toronto. I had an opportunity of seeing it at Natick, Mass., where it originated, and it appeared to be a promising variety. The color is a bright shade of medium dark pink of the Bridesmaid type; it is a good grower and a free bloomer. This is an American seedling, raised by that enthusiastic grower, Alex. Montgomery, who also is giving considerable time and thought to the raising of seedling roses. A visit to the Waban Conservatories is always a pleasant and profitable one, where rose growing is a science, and everything is on the most approved plan.

General MacArthur is a variety raised by E. G. Hill, but was not intended for winter forcing—or rather he did not consider it suitable. The stock was bought by the Storrs & Harrison Co. and John N. May. This variety was received with considerable enthusiasm, as the list of red forcing varieties was very meagre, growers relying largely on Meteor, which of late has shown considerable deterioration. MacArthur is of a bright, cherry red, and very fragrant, a free grower and a moderately free bloomer. There is quite a tendency to throw strong shoots, which are too heavy for most purposes and are covered with large thorns resembling hardy roses. This variety has been grown successfully in this neighborhood, but most people prefer Richmond, and it looks as though MacArthur would be discarded before long. A temperature from 52 to 55 degrees is best suited to it, and a moderately heavy soil.

Franz Deegan, of comparatively recent introduction, is the best of the yellows, eliminating the habit of Perle, which is prone to come bullheaded and deformed in dark weather. Deegan opens as freely in midwinter as in any season in the year, with no deformed flowers. Of an exquisite shade of yellow, deepening to a deep shade of orange in the center, it is a strong grower and a continuous bloomer. This is a variety that improves with age, as plants undisturbed for four seasons are stronger and produce superior bloom to young plants. This variety is almost immune from mildew, and for that reason can be grown where it would not be possible to grow Bride and Maid. It is of easy culture, and a similar temperature to Bride is suitable for it. It enjoys a fairly good feeding, and is benefited by being grafted.

Joseph Hill, a French variety introduced last season, is of the Perle type in appearance and habit. It has a soft shade of peach pink, but an entirely different shade from either Sunrise or Sunset in color, being a combination of both. It has long, pointed buds, good stems, and is the most attractive variety of this color.

Rosalind Orr English has not proved itself so good as its companion, Richmond; there was a tendency to black spot, and the growth was unsatisfactory. The flower is medium in size, of a bright, clear pink, Hermosa shade. I expected better results from this variety, but found other varieties more satisfactory.

Various Pest Preventatives.

As this is an age of progress and improvement, we are finding new ways and methods of fighting some of the pests that have been troublesome in the past. Comparatively few growers will content themselves with burning tobacco for the extermination of the greenfly. Although the preparations put on the market are comparatively expensive, and increase the cost of producing blooms, yet the results are so much more satisfactory that to be up-to-date one feels that he should adopt them.

There are a number of preparations, viz., Aphis Punk, To-Bak-Ine, Nico-Fume and others. The preparations enumerated I can speak of from experience, having used them. For the best results I find the latter the most effective. It is easily applied and is cheaper than the others. These preparations can be applied without injury to the bloom, which is not the case where tobacco is burned. I find To-Bak-Ine extract very effective with varieties like American Beauty, which is more subject to the attack of greenfly than any other variety. The fly can be exterminated and kept in check where this remedy is used regularly in the following manner, and where steam heating is used: Take an ordinary oil-can, fill with the liquid, start at the farthest end, and drop on the hot pipes as quickly as possible, as the fumes are very sickening and you have to beat a hasty retreat. I well remember on a couple of occasions, when necessity required that I undertake to apply in the manner described, my recollection is not a pleasant one, as I had the worst case of sea-sickness ever experienced, along with that giddiness which betokens an overdose of "tangle-foot." With a lit-the care this can be obviated. This remedy is also a preventative of thrips when used in this way, a weekly application being sufficient to keep clear of both thrips and aphids.

There is also Campbell's Sulphur Vaporizer on the market, that has helped to keep down mildew when firing ceases. It is an English patent, and a trifle expensive, but very effective, and eliminates almost all of the danger of ignition. We have all had our pet schemes of using sulphur; some of them have been costly; for instance, when the pan was placed over the coal-oil stove, and the flame set at what was thought just right to form the vapor from the sulphur on the pan. Just at that minute we were called away to attend to some duty, and on returning a couple of minutes later, to our chagrin and dismay we found the pan had taken fire and the sulphur formed that deadly gas so fatal to plant life. Probably that whole house was ruined in those few minutes' absence. For this reason I am pleased to know that this vaporizer has reduced the danger to a minimum. We are using eight of them at present, with excellent results.

I shall not treat of the best houses for rose growing, as it is well known that the lightest and airiest are suitable for the purpose, or I might say for the growing of any flower for winter forcing. The builders have made great advance in the character of houses put up in recent years.

THE POEHLMANN BROS.

And Their Five Foremen.

The accompanying portraits of the Poehlmann brothers and their foremen are from photographs taken by the REVIEW's photographer at the employees' picnic Sunday, September 2, at Morton Grove, Ill., and show the gentlemen in characteristic attitudes. It is not "three of a kind" with the Poehlmann brothers; they are as different temperamentally as they are physically but in combination make a team which pulls together so well that the progress made by the firm the last few years has been one of the notable achievements in a trade which by leaps and bounds is advancing all along the line.

John W. Poehlmann, president of the corporation, stands in the center of the group of three. The selling end of the business is in his immediate charge. You will find him, day in and day out, interminably at it in the store at 35 Randolph street, Chicago. There are few better salesmen than this large, quiet man, who never loses command of the situation, no matter how great the shortage or how big the glut. He has a capable staff but keeps a personal eye on every order that goes out.

Adolph H. Poehlmann, at the right in the picture, is vice-president of the company. He was the builder of what is known as Plant B, at Morton Grove and for a time had a separate business, but came back into the firm when it was incorporated and the real progress began. He is an expert grower and devotes his time to the management of the big range of glass in his charge.

August F. Poehlmann, secretary and treasurer, he of the white suit on the left, is the youngest of the trio and possessed of an indefatigable energy coupled with a sound business judgment, which practically assures the success of whatever he may undertake. He is more than a hustler; he is a deep thinker and few men have gained a clearer insight into the underlying principles of our business, nor has any one been better able to foresee the future, as it has thus far revealed itself.

Possibly one of the best attributes of the Poehlmann management is the ability to know a good man when they have him. Many a good man has graduated from a Poehlmann foremanship into business for himself, but the quintette pictured in the second group are as fine a lot of growers as can be pointed out at any establishment in America. Mentioned from left to right, they are:

Robert Hard was born at Leeds, Yorkshire, England, and worked at several private and commercial places in England. He came to the United States about ten years ago and has worked in about every large town between New York and Denver, including two years for the Cleveland Cut Flower Co. At present he is range foreman at Plant B.

Ill., and worked first for Adolph Fehr, at Belleville, Ill., then at several small places in southern Illinois. He has been with the Pochlmann Bros. Co. for the last nine years and now is carnation foreman at Plant A.

W. J. Keimel was born at Stettin, Germany, and worked two years as apprentice in that country before he came to the United States. He worked for five years in Little Rock, Ark., also five years in New Jersey, with L. M. Noe, of Madison, and Dean & Co., Little Silver. He now is general foreman at Plant B.

Richard Salm was born at Grand Rapids, Mich., and first worked for F. A. Chapman, of Grand Rapids, then for Pochlmann Bros. Co.; then went west and worked for Wm. Clark, Colorado Springs. Coming east again he was employed by Emil Buettner, at Park Ridge, then by the Pochlmanns again, where he has now been eleven years; now Beauty foreman at Plant A. Mr. Salm, in addition to being an expert Beauty grower, is a patriotic American. The Spanish-American war broke out while he was at Buettner's and Dick enlisted in the United States army, served a year and was honorably discharged at the close of the war.

D. J. Mack was born in Massachusetts and first worked for James Horan, at Bridgeport, Conn., also for J. G. Forbes, Boston; Wood & Co., Natick, and Welch Bros., Boston. He now is range foreman at Plant B. He is an all-round good grower.

FADELESS MOSS.

At the Dayton convention an exhibit which attracted more than its due share of attention, considering the space occupied, was a table of really green sheet moss, from E. A. Beaven, Evergreen, Ala. The judges awarded it high commendation. A request to Mr. Beaven for particulars brought the following:

"It is, I claim, the natural evolution of the sheet moss business and at the same time the true solution of it. The writer, pursuing his humble vocation of collecting and marketing the various southern decorative greens, which have of late years entered into and become such an important adjunct of the florists' business, found that at the close of the season he had accumulated quite a large bunch of green (?) sheet moss; that he had failed to secure re-orders for this stock although industriously searching for them.

"Knowing, as I did, that this moss was an almost indispensable adjunct to the florists' business I naturally inferred 'there was a reason.' This was not hard to find. The moss, instead of being a beautiful green, as advertised, was a perfect russet, and my friends the florists did not seem to be falling over one another to secure part of my stock in trade.

"This led to experimentation on my part to try to save the moss then on hand. I finally found a chemical, which, combined with a restorative, produced the results you probably noted at the Dayton convention, to wit, a perfectly green moss, the original color and lustre retained and perpetuated, making it as staple as immortelles and assuring the purchaser of a green instead of russet moss when wanted, regardless of the time he has carried it in stock.

"The advantages are both numerous and obvious. The one which will, I believe, appeal to the consumer from an economical viewpoint is that he can always have a sure supply of this green on hand at a nominal cost and not have to order fresh stock as heretofore every time he has occasion to cover a pot, fill a design, basket, or make a background.

"The moss is packed in bags weighing twelve pounds, containing approximately 100 square feet. You will notice the weight given is apparently too little for the amount of space claimed it will cover. This is accounted for by the fact that each piece is individually treated, all or nearly all of the dirt washed out and there is therefore absolutely no waste stock as in the ordinary run of green moss as marketed today. The chemicals used are, of course, my secret. I have temporarily protected the moss by the filing of a caveat and will complete as soon as possible by patent."

INFLUENCE OF ACETYLENE.

[Abstract of a paper by Prof. John Craig, of Cornell University, read before the International Acetylene Association, July, 1906.]

Three types of artificial light have been investigated in their relation to plant growth since 1861. It was in this year that Hervé-mangon, a Frenchman, studied the effect of electric light on plant growth. He proved that electric light could produce chlorophyll and was capable of causing heliotropism. Dr. Seamon, of England, carried on a comprehensive series of experiments in 1879, '80 and '81, during the course of which he demonstrated the injurious quality of the ultra violet rays. He concluded that a 1,400-candle light about ten feet above glass, under which the plants were grown, was about half as efficient as sunlight.

Déherain continued experiments with arc light in 1889, using a 2,000 naked candle-power. He found the unprotected light injurious, but he also found that the harmful rays could mostly be eliminated by using clear glass. His studies did not suggest that there was a promising field for the exploitation of electric light in forcing-house work.

Studies in electric light, in its relation to plant growth, were instituted at Cornell Experiment Station by Bailey in 1891 and continued for three or four years. The results of these investigations have been set forth in Bulletins 30, 42 and 55. The results were conflicting; some plants were benefited, while others were injured, without regularity or apparent reason. The conclusion was reached that electric light promoted assimilation, hastened growth and maturity; that periods of darkness are not necessary to plant growth; and that it might sometimes be used with profit in certain branches of forcing-house work.

Electric light as a stimulating agent has not been generally adopted by gardeners or florists. Its use is exceptional. At the third annual meeting of the Society for Horticultural Science an interesting paper was presented by Professor Close, of the Delaware Experimental Station, on the results of his experiments with the Cooper-Hewitt mercury vapor light, in which he showed the failure of the light to maintain plant growth for any considerable length of time, and also showed the remarkable modification of form which occurred under exclusive illumination of this kind.

Acetylene Investigations at Cornell.

The writer has been interested in acetylene as an illuminant since 1896, when he was instrumental in bringing added cheer and comfort to the occupants of the rambling Canadian farm homes where his growing days were enjoyed, by replacing the numerous kerosene lamps with natty acetylene burners, which have since then continued to act as an important factor in country life.

Acetylene as an Illuminant.

The discovery of this gas occurred in 1836, but it was not officially christened until 1862. It had no commercial or economic standing until 1892, when a new method of manufacture was discovered at the works of Thomas Wilson, Spray, N. C., by Messrs. d'Chalmot and Professor Morehead. The composition of the light rays is the point which directed attention to its possible use as a growth stimulant. Acetylene more nearly approximates sunlight in its make-up than any other artificial illuminant used. It is composed of the same colors and in very similar degrees of intensity. As for color values of the acetylene rays, let one equal the value of each color of sunlight, and we have the following comparison by Münsterberg:

	Sun.	Acetylene.
Red	1	1.03
Yellow	1	1.02
Green	1	.71
Blue	1	1.46
Violet	1	1.07

Indigo and orange are not given.

In electric light studies it has always been found that the chemical ultra violet rays were the injurious factors in that illuminant. In the case of the acetylene, the ultra violet rays are practically absent, although blue and violet are as strong or stronger than they are found in electric light.

The Experiments at Cornell.

The methods of conducting experiments with acetylene on plant growth at Cornell University were to add the acetylene illumination to the daylight illumination by turning on the former after twilight fell. We endeavored to make comparisons on the influence of this light under different conditions, so that a warm, a medium and a cool house were used.

Temperature of warm house 60 to 65 degrees at night; soil area, 235 square feet; 410 candle-power; five feet from ground.

Temperature of cool house, 45 to 50 degrees at night; soil area, 129 square feet; 350 candle-power; three feet from ground.

Temperature of medium house, 50 to 55 degrees at night; 100 square feet; 270 candle-power; two feet from bench.

I have pleasure in acknowledging valuable assistance from the following firms, who furnished acetylene generators: Radiant Acetylene Generator Co., Canandaigua, N. Y.; Monarch Acetylene Co., Buffalo, N. Y.; Davis Acetylene Generator Co., Elkhart, Ind.; Sunlight Gas Machine Co., New York City.

From the following houses, who furnished burners and other fixtures: W. M. Crane Co., New York City; Drake Acetylene Burners & Supply Co., Cleveland, O.; State Line Co. and American Lava Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.; J. B. Carroll, Chicago, Ill. Finally the experiments were made possible by the generous aid of the Union Carbide Co., which supplied practically all the carbide used, about two and one-half tons.

I should make it clear at the outset that while the main features of the experiments were planned and directed by the writer, the execution of the details, the making of the daily records and the compilation of these records were carried out by M. J. Iorns, who undertook the task as a major problem for a Ph. D. degree in the department of horticulture. The investigation covered two university years.

Scope: The lights in two houses were run nearly 5,000 hours, during which time something over two and one-half tons of carbide were used. In making the investigation 150 plant forms, embracing twenty-five families, fifty genera and sixty-five species were employed.

General results: Influence on top growth for culinary use; most of the salad plants were studied. Lettuce, parsley and spinach were considerably hastened. The seeding period was also accelerated. The plants under acetylene were crisper and apparently more succulent than those grown under sun alone.

Plants Grown for Foliage.

Coleus: The vigor of the plant was increased, but no other marked change, either as to color or consistency of foliage, was noted.

Asparagus Sprengeri and plumosus: Very little, if any, difference was observed between the plants in sun and those in acetylene. Such difference as was noted was in favor of the acetylene plants.

Begonias, Rex and tuberosus: With both types the vegetative growth was considerably stronger under acetylene than under sun alone, but in most cases the flowering period was materially delayed. This might be an advantage in the case of the Rex type, but would be a disadvantage in case of the tuberous varieties grown primarily for flowers.

Cobaea scandens: This produced fifteen to twenty per cent more vine under acetylene than under sun alone. No other modification was observed.

Ferns: These did not show any marked difference, except in the matter of color, which was lighter in the plants under acetylene than those under sun.

In these crops and in some of those following, electric light was contrasted with acetylene:

Root Crops.

Leeks: Here again very little difference was noted between plants grown under acetylene and plants grown under electric light. Both series were a little ahead of those under sun only.

Onions: Very slight differences. Electric, acetylene and sunlight compared. Top growth slightly increased, bottom growth but very slightly affected by either electric light or acetylene. Difference between either electric or acetylene over sun almost inappreciable.

Narcissus on Left had Sun Only; the Other also had Acetylene.

Beets: Top and root growth practically equal under electricity and acetylene, and the difference between these plants and those under sunlight was so trifling that the use of these artificial lights cannot, in the light of our trial, be commended as an economic proposition.

Radishes: Under high temperature—that is, in the warm house—the results were slightly in favor of acetylene over electricity or sun. In the cool house the results secured in the dark days of autumn were strikingly in favor of acetylene over the sun. In this house electricity was not used. The plants under acetylene gave more than double the weight of root product and the time period was increased sixty-two per cent and the maturing period shortened approximately twenty per cent. The results with radishes were not uniform throughout. Crops harvested later in the season, when the sun approximated its maximum, showed less difference between acetylene and sun than those harvested when sunlight was at a minimum as regards intensity. It was also observed that plants on which the acetylene light was applied as soon as the seed was sown became drawn during the seed leaf period. This condition was not observed if the light was not turned on until the true leaves appeared. I am of the opinion that acetylene can be applied to the forcing of this crop with advantage and profit during unfavorable atmospheric conditions.

Fruit and Edible Top Crops.

Strawberries in the cool house: Growth increased twenty-five per cent over those grown under sunlight. Plants ripened fruit sixteen days ahead of other plants carried in a similar temperature uninfluenced by acetylene.

Peas: In both cool and warm houses the effect of acetylene was very marked.

There was very little difference in the temperature of electricity and acetylene, both being artificial.

Bush beans: In the case of the specifically forcing varieties the results in regard to vine and fruit, both quantity and quality of fruit, were in favor of this artificial light. Acetylene produced the best results, although electric lighted plants were in advance of those lighted by sun only.

Pole beans: The results with this crop were conflicting. The effect on vine growth was marked and unquestionable, it being much more vigorous under acetylene and electricity. There was some difference in favor of acetylene in this plant, but less difference than in the case of bush beans. This superabundant vegetative growth had the influence of delaying the time of the maturing of the fruit.

The net result of this experiment, in which electric light, acetylene light and sunlight were compared, was that the acetylene lighted plants ripened more fruit, of a larger size, but considerably later than those under the sun only. The vine growth also was greater. This was to be expected. The plants under electric light did not produce more fruit than the sun plants, but the fruit averaged somewhat larger in size.

The inference from these results is that acetylene might be used to advantage in the fore part of the season in order to stimulate vegetative growth and make framework for producing fruit. In the latter part of the season, when sunlight increases, the artificial light might be withdrawn.

Cucumbers: The results, so far as fruit is concerned, are inconclusive. Electric light was not used in this experiment. In the case of the vines, the addition of acetylene lights was a direct detriment. The leaves were smaller and of a less vivid green. The length of vine was about the same in both cases. It is to be remembered in this instance that the temperature of the room was high, that is to say, it was run from 75 to 85 degrees in daytime, with a 10-degree drop at night. Under these forced conditions of growth, acetylene served to be a disadvantage. The additional stimulant was injurious.

Vegetable Summary.

Comparing the results of the different vegetables, we find:

(1) That with the exception of the cucumbers, all the forms had a decided increase of the foliage parts.

(2) That the time of fruit maturing is variously affected. The strawberries and peas maturing earlier, the tomatoes and pole beans later, and the cucumbers and other forms practically unchanged.

(3) That there is, as a rule, an increase in the amount of fruit, also in size of individual fruits, the cucumber being the chief exception.

(4) That the chief beneficial effects of the light are to make up for deficiency of sunlight, give with few exceptions stronger, more vigorous top growth, and help overcome unfavorable conditions in certain other lines.

(5) That there seems to be a limit in rapidity of growth, beyond which plants cannot be forced at all proportional to the attendant expense. Just what conditions govern this limit or where the limit is in our forcing-house plants, is as yet unknown.

Photosynthetic processes are completed to the point of starch making; root systems increased in the main proportionately with top development.

Influence on Time of Blooming.

Mr. Iorns notes that with three exceptions all forms bloomed earlier under acetylene than under sun alone. Most notable differences are in the case of geraniums. In some cases plants under acetylene bloomed twenty days before those under sunlight. In the case of carnations the blooming time was hastened, but the stems were elongated to an injurious extent. Therefore, from the standpoint of hastening the blooming, it is beneficial.

Lilium longiflorum also was greatly benefited. The per cent of gain of plants under acetylene varied from six to fifteen. L. speciosum under acetylene bloomed two to three weeks ahead of those unlighted. In conjunction with either the effect was very marked.

Quantity of bloom: The influence on quantity of bloom is pronounced. In every case the amount of bloom was increased. In some plants two or three times as many blossoms were produced as in the sun.

Duration of bloom: Here we have an apparent contradiction. The addition of acetylene shortened the number of days which cucumber flowers remained on the vines, but in the case of lily and narcissus the flowers lasted a greater number of days than where only sun was used. This may be due in measure to the innate character of the flower itself.

General Summary.

Between ninety and ninety-five per cent of the plants experimented with responded favorably to the stimulus given by the acetylene light. The remainder were usually negative. There was no uniformity of results within a group of related plants. Lilies, for instance, gave markedly positive results, while some tulips failed to respond entirely.

No markedly injurious results were noted except where plants were growing under optimum conditions.

The general influence of acetylene seems to be that of weak or highly diluted sunlight.

Under unfavorable conditions of temperature and sunlight, acetylene can be used to considerable advantage in stimulating plant growth. It must not be regarded as a magic agent, with which miraculous plant growth may be wrought, but as a supplement or co-operative force to aid the gardener under unfavorable conditions, or at times when natural stimuli must be augmented it promises to be useful.

Under such conditions, with certain forcing-house crops, I believe it can be profitably applied.

In conclusion I would have it understood that I regard these experiments as merely preliminary. There are many questions yet to be answered. For instance, should acetylene be used only in the daytime, during the natural period of plant growth, or on dark days, when the sunlight is deficient? What degree of illumination should be employed? If at night, is it best to run a weak light all night or a strong light in order to give a period of rest part of the time?

Why do some plants respond, and others not? What is the fundamental reason? Will the discovery of this reason give us further light in pursuing our investigations?

Vegetable Forcing.

HOUSE FOR CUCUMBERS.

Farmers' Bulletin No. 254 of the Department of Agriculture, prepared by Prof. L. C. Corbett, gives the following plans for a forcing house for cucumbers:

The chief desideratum in a house for forcing cucumbers is a maximum amount of light, sufficient headroom, and adequate radiation to maintain a temperature varying from 65 degrees to 85 degrees. The amount of radiation will of course depend upon the style of heating employed, whether steam or hot water, and upon the location of the greenhouse, whether at the north or the south, the outside temperature determining to a considerable extent the amount of radiation required in the house to maintain a given degree of heat.

The forcing house for cucumbers may be a broad, even-span house, with a ridge running north and south, or it may be a flat, lean-to type of house, with a short slope to the north, the north wall high and constructed of brick or timber, and the south wall made solid for only a few inches above the surface of the ground and constructed mainly of glass to give sufficient headroom. The even-span house should have foundations extending eighteen to twenty inches above the surface of the ground and glass from the foundations to the angle formed by the eaves, which should be of sufficient height to give headroom in the house. Five feet from the floor level of the house to the angle of the eaves is not too great a distance, and six feet is more desirable. The angle of the roof should be about 30 degrees in the latitude of Philadelphia and northward.

For a lean-to house the angle of the roof is usually made very flat, the height of the south side being about five or five and one-half feet, while the height of the north side is about twelve feet for a house sixty feet in width. In these large houses it is the common practice to use solid benches.

Benches of suitable width, varying from twelve to sixteen feet, with narrow walks between, are provided, the surface of the beds being left about twelve inches above the normal ground level. Where it is possible it is better to provide shallow beds carrying about eight inches of earth slightly elevated above the normal level of the soil, so that the heating pipes, or a number of them at least, can be carried beneath the benches. A type of construction which has proved satisfactory for this purpose is a bed eight feet wide, with side boards eight inches high, carried upon 2x4 oak or hardwood joists raised about six inches from the ground level of the greenhouse. The heating pipes for water under pressure or for steam can be carried beneath this bench and just above the surface of the ground, thus producing bottom heat, which is most desirable for cucumbers. For the broad house above suggested, this type of bench construction, while it is somewhat expensive, will prove satisfactory. The width of the bench is not too great for training cucumbers, four rows of plants being trained in each bed of this width, the plants being set about twelve inches from the border of the bed and parallel with either side, with a double row of plants eighteen inches apart through the center. The training is then accomplished by constructing an A-shaped trellis. This extends over the pathway, from one bed to the next, and is high enough and broad enough to allow the gardener to pass beneath it for the purpose of spraying and harvesting the fruit.

NEW RED AZALEA.

Ch. Vuylsteke, the orchid specialist, of Loochristi, near Ghent, Belgium, is introducing a new azalea, said to be quite different from any other azalea because the flower is composed of two perfectly formed corollas, one within the other. It is known as Azalea Indica Vuylstekeana and the originator thinks it of much promise. The color is a handsome shade of red and makes a charming effect under artificial light.

PAPER WHITE NARCISSUS.

I want my newly arrived Paper White narcissus bulbs to bloom during winter. How should I treat them? Is it too soon to box them up? Will they grow too soon if boxed up now? J. A. K.

If you want to have a crop of these useful flowers in November and December, you can box them at once, because you will have them brought into the greenhouse before there is any killing frost. For those you expect to flower from New Year's on till Easter, you need not box for some weeks yet, say from the first to the middle of October. The bulbs will keep without harm in any dry, cool place. Don't leave them in the cases in which they arrived.

Unlike the tulip and trumpet narcissus, the Paper White and all the polyanthus narcissi are not hardy, and planted too soon they make such an early and lengthy growth that it is difficult to protect the foliage from frosts. We found that the two or three inches of loam covering on the flats can be frozen, and if the leaves of the Paper White have not grown above this covering, no harm from the frost will occur, but if the growth is above this covering and exposed to a few degrees of frost it will be destroyed. So if planted late, the growth will be retarded and not exposed to the early frosts. It may be necessary, however, with flats you keep out of doors as late as February, to cover with six inches of stable litter, leaves, straw or some other protection.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The long spell of drought and heat following the unnatural cold of the latter days of August has evidently had a bad influence upon the growing end of the cut flower business. A great deal of the inferior stock has reached the market lately, and of first-class goods the supply has been limited. Some grand stock of asters arrives daily, but seventy-five per cent of the shipments have no place in the New York wholesale distributing center at all. Dahlias begin to assert themselves, and the cactus varieties are many and beautiful. Lovett, of Little Silver, is shipping daily some splendid kinds that find a ready sale. Gladioli seem to come from an inexhaustible reservoir, and there is no diminution in the flow. America still maintains its popularity. Cattleya labiata is arriving at headquarters and prices are firm, with a constantly increasing demand.

Carnations at least are showing size and stem that are encouraging, and a few grand roses indicate the early return of Maid and Bride to form. Richmond will improve with cooler weather. Beauties hold fast at high prices for the fancy grades, and quality is better. Already, however, the shadows of an enormous chrysanthemum supply are hovering over the market, the greatest New York has ever known.

Club Meeting.

The first meeting for the season was held Monday evening, about fifty being present. Mr. O'Mara reported no progress, and no prospect of any favorable decision as to express rates.

H. H. Barrows, of Whitman, Mass., was elected a member and L. C. Lovett, Little Silver, N. J.; Harry Turner, of Port Washington, L. I., and A. C. Zvol-anek, of Bound Brook, N. J., were nominated. The treasurer read his semi-annual report, showing a balance of $1,783.15.

The award committee reported J. T. Lovett's display of sixty-five varieties of phlox and seventy-five varieties of hardy herbaceous plants, a very complete and interesting exhibit, and he was awarded the hearty thanks of the club. The committee also reported favorably on an exhibition of hardy stock by H. Beaulieu. Bobbink & Atkins, Rutherford, N. J., had intended to stage 120 varieties of herbaceous plants, but the express delivery was delayed.

A committee on resolutions on the death of the brother of Patrick O'Mara was appointed, as follows: Alex. Wallace, Walter Sheridan, C. W. Weathered; also a committee on death of James Weir, Jr., of Brooklyn, consisting of V. H. Hallock, Alfred Zeller and John Birnie.

V. H. Hallock opened an interesting discussion as to the proposed national flower show in connection with a meeting of the S. A. F. at Chicago in November, 1908. Mr. O'Mara said he believes the attendance at such a convention in November would be greatly below the average, and spoke of the difficulty of mixing trade exhibits and a flower show. Many others voiced the same opinion, and on Mr. Birnie's motion that the sense of the club be ascertained as to the most appropriate time for the holding of the S. A. F. convention, it was unanimously declared that August was the best month in the year.

Various Notes.

The trains are crowded now with the returning vacationists. Schools are open, and this coming week will see every place of amusement catering to the pleasure lovers of the big city. All this means much to the florists, and many large wedding decorations are already booked by the retailers. Society is returning slowly from Lenox and the mountains. Newport is gradually drawing its season to a close, the balance of September, however, promising to be the best part of the summer there.

Boston claims to be the floricultural hub of the universe, but at the opening of its great new theatre, the Orpheum, last week, it sent for Donohoe, of West Twenty-ninth street and Fifth avenue, to make its giant unique decoration, a horseshoe of nearly 4,000 American Beauties, 12x15 feet in size, the larger construction being supplemented by nine smaller ones, artistically arranged—the whole a send-off from nine of the leading theatres in the country. Every rose was selected. The Boston papers gave Mr. Donohoe great praise for his finished work.

The great establishment of Bobbink & Atkins, over at Rutherford, seems to resemble the mushroom in rapid growth. One can scarcely realize the advance a month will bring about there. The elegant new offices are furnished, and were greatly needed. Mr. Bobbink is back from Europe, and consignments of palms and nursery stock are soon expected. The importations exceed all past records of this progressive house. Over 100 men are constantly employed. The nursery is now one of the most complete and interesting in this country. It will take you some time to see its 100 acres. If you haven't been there lately, go over. I promise you a revelation.

In a week or two the voice of the auctioneer will again be heard in the land—possibly three voices, if plans materialize. Judging by the successful spring season, and the fact that so many suburbanites have the auction habit, three marts will be none too many. With palms twenty per cent higher, and many new retail stores, it looks as if the buyers would come back to the bargain counters for some of their stock, as was the custom a few years ago. They will find a lot of new faces in the crowd, and few familiar ones.

The newest and finest of the season's stores opened on Thursday, September 6, in the Wall street district. Von Praag of Upper Broadway, near Twenty-ninth street, has one of the neatest, showiest and most convenient places in the city, close to the Stock Exchange and the big office buildings. It's a fine piece of enterprise, and a success from the start. The show window is one of the largest in the city. Everybody is getting rich in Wall street, and this is a handy place to invest some of the profits.

Alfred T. Bunyard, brother of the popular Harry, whom everybody knows, and Miss Hayes, of Pittsburg, were married in August at the Collegiate church, New York, and have just returned from a three weeks' honeymoon at Lake George.

Frank Williams and family have returned from their summer home on their farm in Westchester county, after an enjoyable season.

Rickards Bros., the seedsmen, have made a flying start that is far ahead of expectations. Their store on West Nineteenth street already is a busy place. All their old friends are giving practical encouragement.

Walter Mott, for many years with Henry A. Dreer, and during the last five years in the seed and bulb business in Jamestown, N. Y., will return to his first love October 1 and become the active representative of H. H. Berger & Co., making his home in New York city.

Jos. H. Fenrich has been handling the splendid aster shipments of Robert Brown, of Rhinebeck, N. Y. Last week Mr. Fenrich spent several days with his violet growers up the Hudson.

J. K. Allen enjoyed his annual visit last week also among his shippers at Rhinebeck and Poughkeepsie.

Wertheimer Bros. report a great run of fall ribbon business, and they certainly are rushed, for they are working evenings to ship orders promptly.

Carrillo & Baldwin, Secaucus, say that the business done in orchid plants during their first year is away beyond their expectations.

The last boat from Antwerp brought 4,771 100-foot boxes of Belgian window glass. With a lower duty glass certainly would be cheaper.

William N. Reed, of Reed & Keller, is at home from a summer visit to many European countries, with many trophies in the way of novelties for his supply trade, and added faith in the future of his own country. While he accords the other side the palm in palms and landscape work, he thinks we are far in advance of any place he visited in the development of the cut flower business, and in the elegance and artistic skill displayed in our retail establishments.

Brooklyn.

Brooklyn wholesalers are all busy, optimistic as to the future, and with their large receipts and many buyers entirely independent.

Hicks & Crawbuck are preparing for a complete florists' supply stock, equal to any in the east. Their large new headquarters on Court street make it possible to carry about everything a florist needs. Their cut flower department is complete in every detail.

Bonnet & Blake now are quite at home in their new Livingston street store, and are doing a constantly increasing business. The aster stock they receive daily from Rochester cannot be excelled. Some splendid Maids and Brides are already here from their Jersey shippers.

William H. Kuebler chose an appropriate motto when he announced on removal to his fine store on Willoughby street, "Watch us grow." With his brothers as lieutenants, the trio make up a winning combination that seems to be growing every day.

Brooklyn has now in all respects wholesale cut flower facilities that are in keeping with its size and needs. Its green goods requirements, too, are not forgotten. Henry Crawbuck has built up a splendid trade. His stock of galax is unlimited. He has the Brooklyn agency for Caldwell's wild smilax, which alone in this decorative city of churches is enough to keep one constantly busy. Mr. Crawbuck is still making his home on his nursery farm at Chatham, N. J.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Cut flower business among the retailers has not been all that could have been desired; in fact, several of the best shops report last week the worst of the summer as far as sales were concerned. However, almost every shop reports orders booked for later on in the season, which encourages them to expect a good fall trade. Almost every one reports trade during July and August to have been better than the corresponding months of any other year.

The wholesalers seem to be satisfied as far as the season is concerned, except that they complain of too much work for the amount of business done. Gladoli and asters have been coming in heavily. While most of the good stock is moving out, there are large quantities of stock which must be handled, on which little is realized. Now that all hands have finished their vacations, even this bad feature will be lightened some.

Club Meeting.

The florists' club held its regular monthly meeting last Tuesday evening, with gladioli as the subject for discussion. The Cushman Gladiolus Co. showed two vases of mixed seedlings, one vase Dahlia Sylvia, one vase of red and yellow seedlings. Cowee showed his Gold Medal collection in three sections, light and white, pink and red, and blue and purple, also Jane Dieulafoy, Rosella, Scarsdale, Baron Hulot, and Mephistopheles. These collections and varieties were discussed from the gardeners' and fanciers' point of view, the many odd and striking colors being noted and due credit being given to each, and memorandums being made by some of those present of the best of them for their own collections.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. showed a collection of Frank Banning's stock which they are receiving every day, consisting of America, Augusta, and "1900," which they consider their best commercial sorts; also Mr. Banning's pink seedling No. 12, Madame Monneret, pink seedling No. 2, yellow seedling No. 1, and Octoroon, all of which were good. One extensive grower remarked that it was worth a trip to the meeting to see the yellow seedling.

After duly considering all the exhibits Mr. Reineman was called on for convention news, and spoke in a complimentary way of everything he saw there, especially of the treatment of the society by the National Cash Register people. He also called attention to the efforts of this concern in trying to educate their people, especially the children, in everything pertaining to gardening and floriculture by instructing them and offering prizes for their various gardens.

Our president, John Jones, of Schenley park, then took the floor and gave an account of his trip to Europe, where he visited Wales, his old home, England, Germany and France, looking into all the private gardens and parks. He told many amusing incidents and experiences he had while seeing the sights in the countries whose languages he could not speak. His grand finale was that they are not in it with us, especially where it takes effort and hustle to accomplish anything, and neither do they get the artistic effects in bedding which we do; but he finished by saying he had a conversation with a lady who told him that Americans were excused for thinking that Americans were more artistic in their styles of planting, because they did not have their tastes sufficiently cultivated and could not appreciate foreign work.

William Falconer, who had been attending the cemetery superintendents' convention, was called on for a report and in his modest way said, "Well, there is not much for me to say except that after being around visiting those beautiful places, one comes back home and is ashamed of one's self, and feels that it is necessary to dig in and improve what we have." However, one who has visited Allegheny cemetery and seen the improvements in the last few years will hardly see wherein Mr. Falconer can find anything to be ashamed of.

The meeting was then closed to give the members an opportunity to dispose of some good apples which Mr. Banning was thoughtful enough to pack in one of the boxes with his flowers.

Various Notes.

David Fraser, gardener for H. C. Frick, is still in Europe, and from reports is busy looking up everything new on the other side in the plant and planting line. As David never misses much we await his return and suggest that all members of the club attend the next meeting and hear his report of what he saw.

THE READERS' CORNER.

Asparagus Myriocladus.

In the last issue of the REVIEW E. L. K. asks, "Can Asparagus myriocladus be propagated by cuttings?" Dreer describes it as an "aristocratic Sprengerii," from which it is to be inferred that propagation would be by seed or division. Asparagus tenuissimus is readily propagated by cuttings in August or later in a bottom heat of 90 degrees. Myriocladus (presumably many-branched or many branches) is a handsome decorative subject. T. F. B.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.

The E. G. Hill Co. offers a prize of $15 for the best twenty-five blooms of Chrysanthemum Mary Mann, and $10 for the best fifteen blooms of any introduction of 1906.

DAVID FRASER, Sec'y.

OBITUARY.

George W. Patten.

George W. Patten, who for over thirty years had been engaged in the florist business in Lowell, Mass., died Saturday afternoon, September 1, in Dracut. He was 53 years of age. Mr. Patten's wife was in New York at the time of his death, and was immediately summoned. He leaves besides his wife, a son Percy, at present in the west. Mr. Patten was a member of the Lowell lodge of Odd Fellows and was prominent in the local society of Elks, and in 1900 and 1901 was elected exalted ruler. In 1902 he was appointed district deputy for Massachusetts by the grand exalted ruler of the United States.

C. L. Hartshorn.

Calvin L. Hartshorn, one of the best known market gardeners in New England, died at Worcester, Mass., September 4, aged 73 years. He was born in Worcester and had always lived there. He had served in the Worcester city council, on the school committee and once was a candidate for mayor. He served in the legislature from Worcester in 1879 and 1880, and was at various times members of the state board of agriculture, of the state dairy bureau, and director of the state experiment station at Amherst.

James Warburton.

James Warburton, the oldest florist of Fall River, Mass., was found dead in his home on New Boston road, September 4, from asphyxiation. A few days ago Mr. Warburton fell and bruised himself. Dr. Richard J. Thompson, who attended him, called at the house but was not able to get in. Finding all doors closed and locked and gaining no response to his knock, his suspicions were aroused and he forced an entrance into the house by breaking a window. A rush of gas escaped through the opening. In the bedroom the physician saw Warburton's body.

Mr. Warburton lived alone in a small house on New Boston road. About three years ago he went to England, intending to pass his remaining days there. While there he married. His intention of remaining in England was given up after about a year and he and his wife returned to Fall River, where they lived together until the first of the year, when the couple separated.

NORTH MIDDLETOWN, KY.—A new carnation house will be built this fall at the Dettwiller Plant Gardens.

PEKIN, ILL.—John Bloompot has installed a new Handbury heater in his houses. He has an up-to-date establishment, and is improving it all the time.

FORT RECOVERY, O.—George Popp, Jr., reports that fall trade is good in the bulb line. He expects to do a large volume of business during the next few weeks in hardy plants, carnations, pansies and other kinds of stock.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

Trade is not yet anything to brag of, but conditions have noticeably improved since the first of the month, and the demand is certainly up to what it was last season at this date; indeed, many of the wholesalers report a volume of business considerably in advance of last year, doubtless due to the fact that supplies of stock are rather better in quality and considerably larger in quantity than usual at this season.

It is especially noteworthy that every buyer wants Beauties. Cuts are of good size, and the quality of stock is excellent, considering that we have had an exceptionally warm summer, it having been 88 degrees in the shade on September 10, and almost as warm for several days. A good proportion of the cut is long-stemmed, and the medium lengths are, as always, hardest to supply.

Several growers who carry Brides and Maids for more than one year are getting a good quality of flowers with long stems from plants which were dried off early in the season. The cut from young stock is slowly gaining in length of stem, and quality of flower will improve rapidly after we have a few days of cool weather, but the promised cool wave will check production for awhile. Chatenay is abundant and of good quality. Richmond also is plentiful, but quite single and inclined to pop open. Kaiserin is much short of the demand.

There are quantities of carnations, mostly field-grown, and all short in stem. They sell, but the asters are preferred for many purposes. The heavy crop of asters continues. Much of the stock shows the approach of the end of the season, but there still are enough good flowers to satisfy a brisk demand.

Gladioli are on the wane and other outdoor flowers are less plentiful and poorer in quality. It will not be long now until the indoor stock again has full possession of the field; indeed, the approach of autumn is made apparent by the fact that chrysanthemums are now a daily item of stock. Many growers now know how to do Monrovia, and do it right.

The stock of green goods has been reinforced by the arrival of wild smilax. Most of the houses now carry a case or two in stock, but it will be some time before it is carried in quantity, as it is yet soft.

The Valley Millionaire.

H. N. Bruns has returned from a two months' visit at his old home in Hamburg, Germany. Mr. Bruns is Chicago's valley millionaire. Not that he has made a million from valley, but that he imports the pips by the million; indeed, he passed the million mark years ago, and this year's importations will approximate two million pips. He says the crop will be of good quality this year, but still first-class pips will be short of the demand. He says the price in Germany for cold storage stock is just a little higher than the American price for the same goods, after paying freight, duty, and storage. He thinks it time American dealers raised prices.

The local wholesalers are awaiting with interest information as to the result in Philadelphia, where the wholesalers all have joined hands in an effort to secure more prompt settlement of accounts. The Philadelphians have agreed that in case any buyer fails to pay by the twentieth day of the month following purchase his name shall be reported to all other wholesalers and thereafter all shall demand cash until the balance is reported as liquidated. Credits have been extremely easy in the Chicago market, but are growing closer, for most of the houses feel the weight of the load on the books, and it has been discovered that the few wholesalers who do insist on prompt settlement are not only still in business but thriving.

Various Notes.

George Reinberg reports that last week was the best September week he ever had.

Kennicott Bros. Co. has been receiving fine Clematis paniculata, for which a brisk sale has been found.

L. H. Winterson returned last Friday from a two weeks' trip to New York, Philadelphia, and Atlantic City, after the Dayton convention. He was accompanied by Mrs. Winterson and had a fine time.

Gunnar Teilmann, Marion, Ind., has begun his annual fall shipments of Monrovia chrysanthemum to E. C. Amling.

The growers of carnation plants from the field report the demand not brisk thus far, but have confidence they will sell out, profiting through the misfortune of the many whose stock is dying off after having been benched.

C. W. McKellar reports the demand for orchids as having again appeared. Harrisonite is the only cattleya now available, but labiata will be along inside of the next fortnight. A few dendrobiums are available, and the fall crop of for-mosum will soon be ready.

Clifford Pruner, of the E. F. Winter-son Co., has been ill for a week and now is in the hospital.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. points to the fact that its cuts are coming on much earlier this season than they did a year ago, and that the quality is exceptionally good for this early date. They are just now getting in a new batch of lilies, which are not so plentiful as they have been in this market.

J. A. Budlong is beginning to get in the first crop from the grafted Brides and Maids. They give promise of excellent quality under the careful culture given at this establishment. The other large growers are watching their success with grafted roses with much interest.

As early as September 8 the E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., was sending E. H. Hunt exceptionally fine Monrovia chrysanthemums.

This is club night. In President Hauswirth's absence Vice-President Leonard Kill is due to preside.

The Chicago Rose Co. has been cutting Killarney roses for some time, and is now beginning to cut heavily from Bride and Maid.

C. L. Washburn has returned from his trip into Canada. He went in company with Mr. Robbins, president of the Armour Private Car Lines, and each was accompanied by his son. They penetrated to a lake which had never before been fished except by Indians, and found more fish than they cared to catch.

L. Coatsworth, of the Benthay-Coatsworth Co., left Tuesday night to attend the reunion of the Coatsworth family at Kingsbury, Ont., September 13. His family were already there.

Ollie Zech, of Zech & Mann, spent Saturday at St. Joe and Sunday at South Bend.

The Foley Mfg. Co. is mailing free souvenirs to those who returned the coupon in the REVIEW's Convention Number and to those who registered at the Foley booth at the convention. The souvenir is a neatly enclosed steel tape measure, which gives the English system on one side and the metric system on the other.

Longren & Olsem have completed the contract for glazing four greenhouses for Vaughan's Seed Store at Western Springs, Ill. These enterprising young men have had a busy season.

The Sheridan Park Floral Co., on Evanston avenue, has one of the neatest flower stores in town. For display room the store is hard to excel. There are large windows on each side, the building being set in the narrow angle between the two streets. Leopold Koropp believes in making the most of his opportunities. He keeps the lawn on both streets decorated with rubbers, bay trees and beds, and the approach to the store demonstrates his ability in the landscape line. Mr. Koropp contemplates a new branch store, just behind the present room.

P. J. Hauswirth and Mrs. Hauswirth went to Niagara Falls last Friday to devote this week to the Red Men's national convention there. They were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. George Asmus and children, who are visiting at Buffalo.

A. L. Vaughan, of Vaughan & Sperry,

We Are Ready

To take better care of our customers than ever, as we are now cutting heavily from our New Crop of Roses, which is the best to be found on the market. We are growing three times as many Beauties as last year and are especially strong on Bride, Maid, American Beauty, Liberty, Perle, Chatenay, Uncle John, Richmond and Gate, Carnations of all the Leading Varieties in Season.

In addition to the cut from our own large place, we shall have the product of several first-class growers of Roses. And we shall have other new consignors who are growers of high-grade Carnations and other stock. We shall be in a position to give you the best the market affords at fair prices, and would like to add you to our list of satisfied customers. We can do it if you give us the opportunity. Write us about it. We make no charge for P. and D. on orders amounting to $4.00 and over.

plans an early eastern trip, looking up stock.

C. J. Strombach, who was for many years head gardener at Lincoln park, is starting in the landscaping business with J. M. Bell, of Glencoe. He has been doing work at Lake Geneva this summer. Mr. Strombach now lives at 3815 Ridge avenue, Rogers Park.

The George Wittbold Co. reports having had an exceptionally heavy run of funeral work the last two weeks.

It is reported that T. D. Mosconesotes now is engaged in the liquor business in San Francisco. He was running a restaurant there at the time of the earthquake and was burned out.

Miss Tonner, of the A. L. Randall Co., is home from her four months' European trip and reports having had the time of her life.

Weiland & Risch say that because of their building operations they will be later than usual with their first crop of roses, but they figure on hitting on all the better market by being late.

Charlie Siegh, formerly with Wilcox at Joliet, and well known in this market, is now with the Manistee Floral Co., Manistee, Mich.

Wietor Bros. are cutting heavily of Beauties and say it is making their September sales compare most favorably with a year ago.

The Butler Floral Co., in the Old Colony building, has a store nearly three times as large as the one occupied last season, and is preparing for an active autumn.

Visitors the last week included: A. J. Fidler, Racine, Wis.; A. E. Lutey, Houghton, Mich.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Trade in general started out active for the first week of September. Funeral trade was not quite so plentiful, but other work kept the trade very busy. Transient trade has also looked up with the downtown retailers.

Everybody was busy on Saturday, and thanks to the big supply of asters in all colors, a lot of work was turned out.

Roses are becoming plentiful, though a large portion of them are with short stems. The blooms are good. Bride and Maid are as yet small, but Perle, Richmond and Carnot are coming fine. Beauties, too, are doing well. The supply promises to be extra fine and large this season.

Carnations are yet too small and short-stemmed to bring any kind of price. Those in the market are hardly of any use, only for work in funeral designs. Asters are still overplentiful, and of good quality. The market cleaned up pretty well on these last week. Gladioli are about over for this season. Tuberose stalks are selling well at $3 per hundred. Clematis paniculata is having a fair demand. Cosmos will be in by next week. Plenty of good smilax, ferns, and other greens are in the market for all demands.

Various Notes.

E. Schloss, of Schloss Bros., New York, was a caller last week.

Carl Beyer and wife have returned from a pleasant trip east just in time for a big lot of work.

The Bentzen Floral Co. reports a big week in floral designs for both openings and funerals.

Fred Ammann, of Edwardsville, is sending in a fine lot of roses to Kuehn. Fred is in good shape for extra fine stock this season.

Mr. Kalisch, Jr., and wife have returned home from an extensive trip through the east, buying stock.

W. C. Smith & Co., brokers, have booked a number of large orders for the trade here for both retailers and growers.

George Waldbart is cutting from his farm in Clayton a big lot of extra fine dahlias, which make an attractive show at his Grand avenue store.

The Riessen Floral Co. had to work overtime the last week with funeral work. Mr. Buechel, who is in charge, has had attractive window displays all summer.

The Schray Bros., Emil and Julius, are busy these days getting their houses in fine shape for the fall business.

A. G. Greiner, the cactus man, is attracting many visitors to his place on the Natural Bridge road with a fine display of cacti of all varieties. Mr. Greiner makes a specialty of these.

John Connon, of Webster Groves, was a caller. Mr. Connon has nearly all his carnations housed. From these extra fine plants he expects a big crop this winter.

Joseph Hauser, of Webster Groves, will this year make a specialty of Enchantress carnations. No other variety will be grown at this place.

J. S. Dierkes & Co. have moved their store to Union avenue. There they have a much better stand than the old one.

Splendid Stock and Heavy Cuts

FOR the opening of the Fall Season now at hand we are strong all Along the Line. We are ready to take good care of all orders for American Beauty, Bride, Maid, Chatenay, Richmond, Liberty, Perle, Carnations, Lilies, Valley, Asparagus, Smilax, Adiantum and Asters.

Our stock is, as it was all last season, the best to be had in this market, but we can supply all grades. Give us a trial order for whatever grade of stock you need. While we do the largest shipping business done in the Chicago market, no order is too small to receive our careful attention. Send us a small order and larger orders will follow. Regular standing orders will be shipped direct from the greenhouses. Lowest market prices consistent with quality.

Mention The Review when you write.

Mrs. William Ellison and her daughter returned this week, Tuesday. They spent the entire summer at their northern summer cottage. Harvey Ellison was in charge of the store during the summer months.

J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, visited Springfield on Labor day to confer with Robert O'Dwyer, superintendent of floriculture for the state fair, in reference to floral exhibits for the coming fair. Mr. Ammann is president of the Illinois State Florists' Association. The executive committee of this association held a meeting at the Dayton convention, and it was then decided that Albert T. Hey, of Springfield, and Mr. Ammann act as a committee to take up this matter with Mr. O'Dwyer. In order to make this department a success they will be on the grounds during the fair next month, and will be pleased to meet any visiting florists. All florists throughout the state should interest themselves in this fair.

L. A. Gieger, who has been with Grimm & Gorley for a long time, is now in the employ of Mrs. M. M. Ayers.

A Big Event.

The local florists had a harvest on Saturday in the opening of the big department store known as the Grand Leader. It was estimated that nearly $2,500 were spent in decorations and floral designs. Every florist in the city was busy. C. Young & Sons Co. alone had nearly $1,000 worth of work. Among the others who had a number of large designs were Miss Theresa Badaracco, the Riessen Floral Co., Alex. Siegel, Ostertag Bros., Grimm & Gorley, and the Foster Floral Co. The west end florists, too, were well represented with designs of all kinds. C. C. Sanders, Charles Juengel and C. Young & Sons had the plant decorations.

All the wholesale houses did a land-office business, and stock of all kinds was all cleaned up early. A few large openings of this kind would make us all forget the dull summer months.

Bowling.

The wholesalers got even with the retailers Monday night by winning two out of three games, by the following scores:

DETROIT.

The Market.

Business among the retailers took on quite a spurt the last week, using lots of stock, but out-of-town shipments have been few.

Roses are bringing anywhere from $2 to $5 per hundred, some specials going at $6. The Detroit Cut Flower Supply House is getting in some large shipments of fine roses. More carnations are seen, but are still small flowers, and about 8-inch to 10-inch stems. Lawsons are about the poorest thing on the market.

Large shipments of fine asters are arriving twice daily at the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange. Good asters move fairly well, but the medium and poor grades are a glut.

Club Meeting.

Presumably many of the florists are making up for lost sleep, as there was but a small attendance at the club's last meeting, held September 5. Convention talk occupied most of the evening, and some interesting reports were given by several of the members.

E. A. Scribner gave a complete, clear description of the N. C. R. mammoth plant, also dwelling on the work done for floriculture by that enterprising firm. He stated that Uncle Sam deserved great credit for his care of our old war veterans at the Soldiers' Home. The refreshment committee received a vote of thanks. Despite the warm weather no one died of thirst enroute, or at Dayton either, for that matter, as there was plenty to drink. William Brown says the water is too thick.

The secretary was instructed to direct a letter on behalf of the Detroit Florists' Club to the president and members of the Dayton club, thanking them for their hospitality. He was also instructed to send a letter of appreciation to the National Cash Register Co.

Secretary Sullivan received several knocks in regard to the mistake in the railroad fare as announced by him, but vindicated himself fully, showing beyond a doubt that the ticket agent misquoted the price in the first place.

Michigan State Fair.

The Michigan state fair, held at Detroit August 30 to September 7, was a marked success. Fine weather prevailed during the full nine days.

A new horticultural building provided ample space for the floral exhibits. John Breitmeyer's Sons had a fine exhibit of ferns, fancy caladiums and coleuses. S. Taplin had an exhibit of palms and a floral design. Mrs. F. Rush won first prize on a floral design. Thos. Gowanlach displayed some prize asters. B. Schroeter had a floral design and several entries of roses. F. A. Thompson & Co. had a booth in the main building. Among the nurserymen on the grounds with exhibits were: W. W. Essig & Co., of Detroit; E. Ferrand & Sons, of Detroit; the Greening Nursery Co., of Monroe, and I. E. Ilgenfritz Sons & Co., of Monroe.

The Convention Date.

The Detroit florists are one and all opposed to the contemplated changing of the convention date. It is not only customary to take vacations in summer, but seventy-five per cent of the florists cannot get away during November, meaning a loss of about that per cent of Detroit members, as few who do not attend the conventions would belong to our grand society.

Our people hope that the executive committee will consider this matter thoroughly before making a move that will so greatly reduce the ranks of the S. A. F. No doubt the falling off would be proportionately the same from other cities, especially among the retailers and smaller florists.

Various Notes.

Leopold Mallest, of Mt. Clemens, for many years with Robert Klagge, but now in business himself, is cutting some fine Enchantress.

It did not take a special ear to bring home the trophy won by the Detroit bowlers at the convention, but nevertheless they are the proud possessors of a pretty loving cup as a consolation prize.

The Market.

Business continues to be good for this season of the year. There is a good, healthy demand, and while the supply is not all that could be desired, it is fair, and there are few orders which cannot be filled in full, and with good stock. Several decorations of good size and a good run of funeral work made the business. The best flower buyers are beginning to arrive home, and their influence will be felt from now on. All indications point to a good fall trade, and now with the mums only a few weeks off it will be on us before we are aware of it.

Asters, which have been so plentiful this season, are beginning to get a little scarce now, and the price is advancing to a fair figure. Some good ones are still to be had and they sell on sight. White is still in the heaviest demand. Gladioli are about out of the market for this year, and we are all glad to see them go, as they were not a paying crop this season. Tuberoses did pretty well, and some good ones are still to be had. Carnations are not much to speak of yet, but are improving and within a few weeks we ought to have some fine blooms. There is a brisk demand for them and they sell out clean at fair prices for inferior stock. Roses are improving rapidly and some good ones are to be had now. Beauties especially are coming in fine shape and sell well.

Florists' Society.

Owing to the fact that there was not a quorum present, the regular meeting of the Florists' Society scheduled for last Saturday night had to be called off.

It is now an open question whether the society will continue to give the three flower shows in its club-rooms, as it has done in the past. At the next meeting this subject will be talked over pro and con, and a decision arrived at. It is a question whether these shows as now run are really of enough benefit to the florists of this city to pay for the time and trouble they cost. The society has been obliged to depend upon the same persons year after year to supply the money for prizes, and it is beginning to be an imposition to call upon them any longer. Not only that, but the club-room of the society has out-grown its usefulness as a place to hold exhibits. In the first place it is too small, and in the second the location is not right to attract the better class of the flower buying public. The time is now ripe either to drop the shows altogether, or to hold them in a more suitable place and in an up-to-date manner. This appears to be the general opinion of all of those most interested.

Flower Show.

Last Thursday the first flower show of the fall festival was held, and W. K. Partridge, who had a contract to make the entire exhibit, gave the public a treat which will be long remembered. Great crowds viewed the exhibit all day long, and they were well repaid for their time. The collection of decorative plants was fine, containing only the best specimens, and there were many fine and novel blooming plants as well. In cut flowers there was an orchid table which showed some excellent blooms and was much admired by the public. There was a profusion of gladioli and other flowers in season. One of the novel features was a vase of chrysanthemums, a beautiful, large, yellow variety, from the E. G. Hill Co. These were the first mums to be seen in this city this season. A general decorative effect was carried out throughout, and a pleasing blending of colors and artistic grouping and arrangement made the exhibit a work of art.

The next show will be held on Thursday, September 20, and it will be devoted to table decorations, wedding bouquets, wreaths and baskets. Good prizes are offered in all classes, and competition is open to all. It is expected that several out-of-town florists will compete.

Various Notes.

E. G. Gillett and family spent a few days in Springfield last week.

It is reported that President William Murphy, who is spending a few weeks on the Great Lakes, has been sick.

The florists of College Hill who get their water supply from the city have been having a hard time this summer, several of them being obliged to haul it from quite a distance. The trouble arises from the fact that the new city water-works system is not completed, and the old one is inadequate for the demands made upon it. C. J. OHMER.

The Market.

There is a perceptible increase in the supply of all the staple varieties of cut flowers. The volume of business is larger than a week ago, sufficient to consume the stock coming in, but at lower average prices. Asters and dahlias continue the features. Harrisii lilies are in evidence in two commission houses. Orchids have made their appearance in sufficient quantity to quote. Cosmos, which has been arriving in limited quantity, is now beginning to sell. Gladioli are plentiful and fine. Chrysanthemums made their first appearance on Saturday, Edw. Reid having some nice flowers of a yellow of the Byron type. Valley is the scarcest article on the list, the demand being quite active. Richmond rose is now arriving in quantity. They are better at present than Liberty.

Merion.

One of our florists, facetiously inclined, delights in telling Henry I. Faust that he does not know where he lives. By which the cheerful chappie means that Mr. Faust's greenhouses are located on the borders of Overbrook, Bala, in the telephone district of Cynwyd and near the station of Merion. Henry I. Faust indignantly refutes this charge, claiming, not unreasonably, that even the mighty Bell Telephone Co. may not decide where he lives so positively as Uncle Sam. His postoffice, he says, is at Merion. So the representative of the REVIEW was dispatched to call on Henry I. Faust at Merion. You may be curiously inclined, and desire to know just why the REVIEW man should be sent to Merion during the early days of September, when it is hot and nobody wants to go in a greenhouse that is not his own, unless he has to do so. To these I may answer that it is only necessary to go to Fred Ehret's and observe the reverent way in which he handles certain bunches of flowers, and when you ask why, he whispers the magic word, "Faust;" or to go to Edw. Reid's and see the genial smile with which he opens certain bundles of astonishing maiden-hair, a smile given only to laudatory letters from distant customers or to these same bundles, which always bear the magic letters "F-A-U-S-T" upon them; or you may go to A. M. Campbell's and mark the boyish heartiness with which he tells you that he has consignments from so many different growers, concluding in a casual way with the information that H. I. Faust is one of them.

Henry I. Faust, of Merion, has as pretty a lot of chrysanthemums as one could wish to see. There are perhaps 12,000 of them, grown chiefly to single stems, all of the best late varieties. Jeanne Nonin, whose score was but two short of perfect at the chrysanthemum show last fall, is undoubtedly the star. There are fully 5,000 of these promising whites, all in superb condition. Mrs. Blanc, pink, with a score of ninety-five, comes next. Then there are Dr. Enguehard, Maud Dean, Major Bonaffon, Baby, the tiny yellow, and a few Dorothy Faust. There are two houses of Mr. Faust's Adiantum Croweanum, one house each of grafted Brides, Maids and Kaiserins, and 1,000 Nephrolepis Scottii.

Unfortunately Henry I. Faust was absent, but he was ably represented in a quick trip over the place which impressed the writer as justifying all that has been said of it.

Various Notes.

The Peacock Dahlia Co., of Williamstown, N. J., began shipping its fancy dahlias to the Leo Niessen Co. on Tuesday.

Hitchings & Co. are erecting two new greenhouses in place of wornout structures at Girard College. These houses are of iron ridge, roof and gutter. The old brick walls have been utilized. One house was planted with roses, Richmond, Killarney and Chatenay, last Monday. The other will be used for crotons. So says His Grace of York.

The senior member of the firm of Evenden Bros., Williamsport, Pa., was a visitor in this city on Monday.

To be able to ship brittle flower pots by way of the stormy Cape to Honolulu seems to J. G. Whilldin as easy as falling off a log would to you or me.

Berger Bros. expect some fine violets of all the leading varieties. Their stock is in prime condition and will be ready as soon as cold weather sets in.

R. G. Palmer has visited Fifty-eighth street and Gibson avenue recently. He reports L. J. Reuter's place in better condition than ever, the Killarney being especially fine.

The Henry A. Dreer Co. is actively engaged shipping palms from Riverton, and filling bulb orders at 714 Chestnut street, a sure sign that the campaign has opened in earnest.

Thos. J. Oberlin, of Sinking Spring, Pa., is sending fine gladioli to the Flower Market. "1900," a brilliant red; Snow White, and a very large flower, soft pink, the name of which I forget, are among his best varieties.

Arthur Zirkmap, of Rice & Co., has just returned from a most successful western trip, meeting his family on their arrival from Europe.

Frank McDonald, of Edw. Reid's force, is ill with typhoid fever.

An expert who has visited the greenhouses of Geo. Burton, at Wyndmoor, Pa., states that his Beauties are in exceptionally fine condition, and predicts that the Leo Niessen Co. will again have these flowers when they are most in demand. PHIL.

[We wish to make it quite clear that the illustrations in last week's issue, accompanying the descriptions, in the Philadelphia column, of some of the novelties of M. Rice & Co., were from photographs also supplied by Rice & Co. Greetings from B. Eschner, of this firm, who is spending a part of his vacation with Mrs. Eschner at Lake Minnetonka, Minn., indicate that it is "all right" there.—Ed.]

The Market.

Hot weather for the month of September prevails and this has a somewhat depressing influence on the market. Taking everything into consideration, however, flowers have sold fairly well. Carnations are much more abundant, selling mostly for $1 to $2 per hundred. Roses other than Beauties vary from $1 to $8 and improve in quality. Asters sell at from 35 cents to $1.50, according to quality and variety. Lilium longiflorum and speciosum are in fair supply. Physostegia sells well. Gladioli are becoming small and poor. A few chrysanthemums come in. No change in adiantum, Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri.

Autumn Exhibition.

The annual September show of plants and flowers held September 5 and 6 brought out a fine lot of exhibits. There have been more displays of stove and greenhouse plants in previous years, but changing tastes necessitated the cutting out of a number of classes formerly devoted to these. On the other hand the display of dahlias never has been equaled or even approached in Boston. The interest in this popular flower seems to be ever on the increase.

Mrs. John I. Gardner, Wm. Thatcher gardener, was the most successful exhibitor in the plant classes. Mrs. Frederick Ayer was first in three classes and William Whitman, M. Sullivan gardener, was second for pair of palms and also contributed a group of palms. R. & J. Farquhar & Co. had a large group of decorative plants, also a table of hardy herbaceous plants. Harvard Botanic Gardens had a group of ornamental plants which was one of the features of the show. A. F. Estabrook, Geo. Barker gardener, had a good group of palms, adiantums, etc.

H. A. Dreer Co. had three large tanks of nymphæas and other aquatics, awarded a first-class certificate. They also received honorable mention for Adiantum macrophyllum bipinnatum albobstriatum, Adiantum scutum ramosum, Maranta Gouletii, Asparagus Ducheni and Pteris Childsii.

Lager & Hurrell had a small table of seasonable orchids. For thirty vases herbaceous flowers Blue Hill Nurseries won with a superb collection. Bay State Nurseries were second on this occasion. They also showed a fine collection of phloxes and another collection of herbaceous plants. J. Breck & Son had a collection of cactus dahlias. W. W. Rawson & Co. had a fine collection of dahlias, also Lilium Philippense.

H. H. Rogers, James Garthly gardener, had a nice lot of Begonia grandiflora erecta cristata awarded honorable mention.

Blue Hill Nurseries had a large collection of ornamental grasses. J. K. Alexander, gladioli. Mrs. E. M. Gill and Mrs. A. W. Blake, J. L. Smith gardener, miscellaneous displays. J. R. Clarke had perennials in pots.

Dahlias almost entirely filled the lecture hall. Of these there were ten to twelve entries in each class. Prizes went son, Brockton; W. P. Lothrop, East Bridgewater, and Mrs. H. A. Jahn, New Bedford. The executive committee will select a date for a further meeting to be held soon. It is not intended to make the society a strictly commercial one, but it is hoped to interest many of the ever-increasing army of amateur cultivators. There is ample scope for such a society. The increase in the culture of this flower in Massachusetts of late years is remarkable, and as dahlias are everybody's flower, and are widely grown in America, succeeding with a minimum of care, we look for a strong and active dahlia society.

Various Notes.

The coming meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club September 18 promises to be once more a record-breaking one. F. G. Palmer's paper, read at the Dayton convention, on "The Ideal Gardener," will be discussed and a number of members will give vacation experiences in Europe and America. Some special attractions are being planned and a big addition of new members is already assured. No one can afford to miss this meeting.

Mr. and Mrs. James Wheeler are away on a vacation, and will include a trip up the Hudson river, Buffalo, Niagara and Toronto in their itinerary.

For the Jackson-Williams wedding at King's chapel, on September 6, Galvin decorated, using Hydrangea paniculata largely, with numerous bay trees.

Governor Guild has appointed Prof. I. W. Kane to succeed Alfred Ackerman as state forester of Massachusetts.

N. Silverman and J. J. McCormack are back from their New York trip and entertain many of the market habitués with their experiences. J. J. McCormack has opened a flower store in Henry Seigel Co.'s big department store.

P. Welch is back from his annual outing at Old Orchard Beach, Me.

Worcester Conservatives have purchased all the stock of the late F. A. Blake, Rockdale, Mass.

What has happened to the once famous Box Club? We have heard nothing of it for a long time.

The first meeting of the Park street market bowling team was held September 5. E. Crawley, of Newtonville Greenhouses, better known as Uncle Eddie, is captain.

George Cartwright buried his mother on September 6.

James Q. Quinn and wife, of Brookline, are enjoying their vacation at Manchester, N. H.

E. Sutermeister scents up the Park street market with his bunches of heliotrope, which are of fine quality.

Anderson & Williams, of Waltham, have engaged J. S. Newton to act as their salesman at the Park street market.

Mann Bros. are bringing in some fine Lilium Philippense which brings $1.50 a dozen. This lily promises to be largely grown for market another season.

H. H. Rogers is sending in some superb pink, white and lavender asters, the best we have seen this season.

Visitors last week included Henry Hurrell, Summit, N. J., and J. S. Hay, representing H. A. Dreer, Philadelphia.

The members of the Boston Coöperative Flower Growers' Association had their annual auction sale of stalls at the Park street market on September 8. There was a large attendance of growers and bidding was animated. Premiums varied from $90 to $15, and 110 stalls were disposed of. The directors expressed themselves as well pleased with the results of the sale.

In last week's news notes it was stated that Bay State Nurseries were started in 1904. This should have been 1894. The temperature grape vines withstood in China should read 20 degrees, not 90 degrees, below zero. W. N. CRAIG.

DECATUR, ILL.—Baker Bros. are putting up a greenhouse at Fairview park, for the park commissioners.

NEW ORLEANS.

Chrysanthemum Conditions.

For the next six or seven weeks the attention of the florists around New Orleans will be centered on chrysanthemums, which are an important crop for November 1. They must be good, plentiful, and just in time for that day; after or before they are hardly worth growing. They are appreciated only as a remembrance of the dead. We have been lately among many growers and found the crop in good condition. As to quantity they are above last year. The quality seems also to have improved.

Abele Bros. had a little trouble with their plants, owing to the dry spell which we had for over two months, but they say everything is growing right now.

George Thomas is not a large grower, but what he has will compare favorably with any other.

J. H. Menard has more than last year, and no doubt his experienced grower, Claude Orry, will have good flowers to offer to his customers.

M. Alost raises a good quantity, but he does not disbud very closely, using them more in bunches.

J. F. Dubois has moved his place opposite the Carrolton cemetery. The location is good. As far as chrysanthemums raised outside are concerned, he seems to be the largest grower in New Orleans. He has 50,000 plants of different varieties. They look good and will certainly bring him a good return.

At the Metairie Ridge Nurseries, of which Harry Papworth is manager, we found the finest lot of chrysanthemums that have ever been raised around here, and comparing favorably with any raised in other places. So far, at the beginning of September, they are perfect. The largest variety is Robinson, which for a long time has been found the best variety for our climate. Many others of midseason, nearly none of the earliest and a few of the late kind are also in good shape. Half of his greenhouses are planted with them, the other half is in roses. The culture of roses under glass here is a new departure, but judging from the fine standing of the plants this culture is also perfectly well understood down here. A few varieties like Richmond, Etoile de France, Meteor, etc., did not take very well, but American Beauty, Bride and Maid and a few others are fine. The stock is clean, growing vigorously and no doubt will be well paying during the winter months.

P. Chopin deals in extra fine stuff. Still he wants to have a few samples of outside grown plants, and he has them in a good quantity, of Holst and Robinson.

Frank Faessel seems to have inaugurated a new scheme in raising the largest part of his stock in raised benches. His whole place is nothing but long boxes, six inches deep, three feet wide and a foot and a half apart. I am not prepared to discuss the value of this new idea, but it is being imitated by many, and is certainly full of good points for our climate and in some special location. Mr. Faessel's mums raised this way, also his roses, carnations, etc., are a proof that there is much to study in this new way of growing plants and flowers.

M. Cook & Son keep their stock under glass. The senior member, just coming back from the convention, says he is well satisfied with the looks of his mums. He had some alterations to make on his place, having disposed of a part of his grounds, so he could not plant as many as before. His business is going to be conducted hereafter by his two sons.

William Rehm, who has his place in charge of R. Eichling, does not grow chrysanthemums. He seems to have a fancy for kentias, of which he has a good, clean stock.

J. St. Mard is an old specialist in chrysanthemums. For several years he has given the proof that a large, strong mum could be grown down here, and he is well prepared to offer a nice crop of Robinson, Cannell and other varieties.

CLEVELAND, O.—The Cleveland Cut Flower Co. will erect a new heating building, the contract for which has been given to the Hunkin Bros. Construction Co.

BEATRICE, NEB.—The Dole Floral Co. shipped a carload of plants to the state fair at Lincoln, and had a large display there. E. W. Dole had charge of the exhibit.

DES MOINES, IA.—The store of the Iowa Seed Co. was burglarized on the night of September 3. Only $3.50 in change was secured. The thieves thoroughly ransacked the building.

CAMDEN, N. J.—The Peacock Dahlia Farms have been incorporated, with $25,000 capital stock. Incorporators are M. L. Peacock and S. C. Southard, Atco, N. J., and C. G. Stevenson, Camden.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va.; First Vice-Pres., Charles Burge, Toledo, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 25th annual meeting will be held at New York City, June, 1907.

MRS. THEODOSIA B. SHEPHERD, Ventura, Cal., is reported critically ill.

THE crops of late varieties of seed sweet corn are said to be very promising.

THE catalog men are getting busy. In December the southern lists will be sent some unusually nice books.

It is reported by one authority that Connecticut seed crops of the Globe varieties of onion will be well up to averages.

FROM reports at hand the Michigan cucumber seed crops give better promise in proportion than the Nebraska acreage does.

HARRY W. FISHER, manager of the seed department of Montgomery Ward & Co., Chicago, spent his vacation in the pea district of Canada.

No change in the pea and bean situation is reported. The milling of peas and the harvesting of beans continues, and net results will be known in due time.

SECRETARY KENDEL has mailed to members the twenty-sixth annual report of the American Seed Trade Association, containing a stenographic record of the Toledo convention.

THE onion set is still holding its own and the smaller growers, who ordinarily let go of their product gracefully in September of each year, are holding on to it in an exasperating manner this season.

THE pea packers have reached the end of the season, with a light pack and all stock sold on contract, so that a good demand is assured for next year, and a probability of an increased acreage being required.

WHITE Portugal onion seed will likely cost the onion set growers considerably more by planting time of 1907 than it did in 1906. As low a delivery as ten per cent is all that some of the growers will be able to supply.

VISITED CHICAGO: Lowell Emerson, of the Western Seed and Irrigation Co., Fremont, Neb.; S. A. Bedford and W. A. McCracken, of E. A. McKenzie Co., Ltd., Brandon, Manitoba; S. B. Dicks, of Cooper, Taber & Co., London, England.

It is reported that a Holland firm of bulb growers has this year supplied a custom house broker with invoices for about two-thirds the total of the invoice sent to the customer, with the naive request that the difference in duty be remitted to the shipper in Holland.

THE board of general appraisers on August 28 sustained the protest of Currie Bros. Co., Milwaukee, against the assessment of duty on vetch seed by the collector at Milwaukee. The case recorded as T. D. 27,306 now is considered as authority for admitting vetch seed free.

It is reported that the Shugart-Ouren Seed Co., Council Bluffs, Ia., has largely increased its business since moving into its own building. The corporation was organized in 1893. The officers are: President, T. J. Shugart; vice-president, F. R. Davis; secretary, J. P. Davis; treasurer, C. G. Ouren. Field seeds, poultry supplies, implements and fruit packages are handled.

THE Secretary of Agriculture has published another of his adulterated seed circulars, No. 20. It relates that 352 samples of alfalfa were obtained in the open market and examined. Of these, 160 were found to contain seed of the destructive parasitic plant dodder; nine samples were found to be adulterated with yellow trefoil, and nine samples adulterated with bur clover. The names of those who sold the adulterated lots are given, with the percentage of adulterant in each sample. Some eminently respectable names are included.

per cent of an average crop as a whole. Some pieces of onion will not give over ten per cent, others are a total failure. So far as my observation has been the Southport Yellow Globe variety has been the most affected by the blight. The corn crop will be fair, but not large. There was a smaller acreage planted this season, which will reduce the general average quite a little. We are now having a dry spell, which is favorable for maturing the crop, but unfavorable for turnip."

NEBRASKA SEED CROPS.

Wm. Emerson, of the Western Seed and Irrigation Co., Fremont, Neb., writes as follows under date of September 10: "The writer has been inspecting some of our crops in the vicinity of Columbus and Fremont, Neb. We regret to report that the cucumber and muskmelon are in poor condition and the vines in a backward and in some cases almost dead stage, caused by the aphids and the hot, dry weather, so that the first setting of fruit is about the extent of the crop in sight.

"We believe the cucumber and muskmelon seed crops in Nebraska will be less than fifty per cent. of an average crop and look for quite an advance in the prices of nearly all of the standard varieties as the shortage is more fully realized.

"Pumpkin, squash and watermelon are in better shape, but the fruits on these have not set so thickly as usual and are somewhat late, so that we do not look for any large yields or surplus.

"Sweet corn and field corn are doing well and are maturing fast in the hot, windy days we now are having, and unless we have an early, hard frost we look for good yields of most varieties. Some of the corn crops are somewhat late and will need two to three weeks to fully make good, well-matured corn. The acreage is considerably smaller than usual and we do not look for any large surplus of sweet corn this season."

QUITS CHICAGO BOARD.

Albert Dickinson, president of the Albert Dickinson Co., a firm that is among the leading grass seed dealers of the country, on September 11 posted his Chicago Board of Trade membership for transfer. The posting of the membership practically means the passing of the big seed house from the Chicago board.

The Dickinson firm has not been actively represented on the exchange since March 1, when the present commission rule, which provides for trading charges double those which prevailed before that date, went into effect. The Dickinson company complained when the higher rates were being agitated that the adoption of them and the placing of all traders on a brokerage basis would militate against progress in its business. Conservative members of the Board of Trade figure that the withdrawal of the Dickinson house will result in the diverting of much grass seed business to other market points. It is believed that the bulk of business will go to Duluth and Minneapolis.

EUROPEAN SEED NOTES.

Throughout nearly the whole of Europe we are experiencing so many variations in weather that it is difficult to give any accurate idea many weeks ahead of results of any seed crops. A much more hopeful report has been given recently of the general run of crops, but now so many extremes of weather are continually occurring that few crops are left unharmed.

Perhaps radish crops have suffered the worst. What the weather had left of the French and Italian crops insect troubles have finished off, and supplies are nearly ruined. Of the Holland crops only a small acreage was planted and this applies also to England, so that little may be expected from these sources.

The result of the excessive heat will be a high germination, and such weather conditions usually leave nothing to be desired. The few crops of turnip that have been thrashed and tested have resulted in a high percentage of germination; although on account of ripening off so quickly the individual grains of all seeds are proving to be much smaller than an average, and poor in color. All users of seeds, of no matter what description, will have to pay a higher price for their requirements during 1907 than for some years past. A gradual and in some cases a rapid advance in price may be expected on all vegetable and farm seeds, and in most cases in flower seeds, also. This will be a welcome change; for some time past values have been so low as to leave absolutely no profit for the grower, little if any for the wholesaler and only a small profit for the retailer. There will not be any one, from the grower to the consumer, who will not welcome a higher price and more healthy tone in the seed trade.

It is reported that a pure yellow sweet pea is at last an actual fact, and will in due course of time be placed on the market. If this is a fact, it is indeed a lucky find, and worth a fortune to the lucky raiser; but this pure yellow may prove to be a cream or primrose color. Should it be a true, deep, pure yellow, it will be a decided acquisition.

Speaking further of sweet peas, it is satisfactory to note that these are being grown successfully on a large scale in Italy, and the crops in that country are turning out better and heavier results than in any other part of Europe. One grower informs me he will be able to offer leading sorts at less than the usual 10 cents per pound generally asked by the Californian growers. In fact, he expected to be able to put the seed on the market at 35 shillings per hundred pounds, or about 8 cents per pound. He also informs me that the conditions of climate, etc., are practically identical with California. B. J.

GRASS SEED REPORT.

Conrad Appel, whose grass seed business was established at Darmstadt, Germany, in 1789, says that:

Concerning grass seeds, the result in Europe may be called pretty satisfactory, so that prices for most varieties will probably not rule higher than last year.

A good crop is to be expected of Agrostis stolonifera, provided the weather is favorable. The same refers to Aira caespitosa, which will be harvested in the course of September. Aira flexuosa (yellowish oat grass of the trade) will yield a medium crop only; average qualities will likely be obtainable at last year's prices.

Alopecurus pratensis (meadow foxtail): In Finland, the principal district of production, all indications point to a large yield. Some speculators have paid prices to farmers which are unreasonable, considering the large crop, and which will not be maintained. We shall see normal prices soon again, but the business in this article will be somewhat late.

Anthoxanthum odoratum (sweet vernal grass) is gathered in small quantities and will cost more than last season. Anthoxanthum Puelli yielded well and will be obtainable at last year's prices.

Avena elatior (tall oat grass) is reported from France to have suffered by drought, but a good medium crop seems to be expected.

Bromus mollis has given a good result, but Bromus inermis has suffered by unfavorable weather.

Cynosurus cristatus (crested dogstail) promises a satisfactory crop, but it all depends upon the weather during the next fortnight.

Dactylis glomerata (cocksfoot): New Zealand has had a good result, but qualities do not show the bright color we are accustomed to. Reports of an excellent crop in America have weakened the prices for New Zealand seed. Samples received so far from America show a fine color, but are poorly dressed and contain a good deal of shelled grains. The larger part of the American crop is reported by American shippers to be unsuitable for export. New Zealand produce, therefore, seems to be preferable to American seed. The German cocksfoot, which also has had a good result, seldom shows a really pure sample; most of the lots contain sorrel and other weeds, also much ryegrass, which to take out causes a good deal of work and makes the seed too dear. Farmers got pretty high prices all the same, and it remains to be seen if the trade will take up the seed at the respective figures. The crop in Austria is reported well.

France is said to have a small yield on account of drought, and Scandinavia speaks about a good crop concerning quality.

Festuca arundinacea or elatior (tall fescue) has been harvested to satisfaction and prices will likely rule lower than in the past season. Festuca ovina and Festuca duriuscula, owing to the low prices, acreage considerably reduced. On the whole the crop turned out pretty well, but the quality is not always as it should be, so that for nice pure lots, free from weeds, higher prices are allowed. Festuca ovina angustifolia yielded a medium crop but the qualities differ greatly. Good heavy seed is in brisk demand and will maintain its prices. Festuca heterophylla and Festuca rubra of German growth are harvested only in smallest quantities. Qualities are fair and prices will be about same as last year. New Zealand produce is quoted at high figures and a complete failure is reported.

Lolium perenne and Italcum (English and Italian ryegrass): According to reports received from the centers of production a good full crop of fine quality is expected, but of lighter weight than last season. Prices will likely be same as last year, perhaps even somewhat lower, but much depends upon the weather yet during the next fortnight.

Phalaris arundinacea has in our district not succeeded well, better in the north, and will probably maintain last year's prices.

Phleum pratense (timothy): Speculators have early in the season already made the prices rise, pretending a short crop on account of a reduced acreage and drought; we shall see, if this was deserved. In Germany it looks as if the result is going to be a good one and in such case, and if the prices are not too high, no doubt German seed will be preferred to American.

Poa nemoralis (meadow grass) a medium crop; qualities turn out very different, so that good heavy seed is not obtainable much below last year's prices.

Poa trivialis (rough-stalked meadow grass) has given in the north a good yield and prices will not be higher than last year.

Red clover: Reports on the European crop are conflicting, but in face of the fact that stocks are perfectly cleared out, low prices cannot be expected, even if crops turn out satisfactory. White clover is a good yield but the quality could be better. Market is very quiet owing to buyers holding back, and prices will rule lower yet than last year.

Alsike has done well, both in American and European centers of production and is quoted cheaper than last year. Qualities are good. Both France and the Austrian and German districts had a large yield of crimson clover so that the high opening prices could not be maintained, but had to be reduced before any important transactions were concluded. French grown seed was generally preferred, because it was not materially dearer but much better than Austrian seed.

Lucerne promises well in Italy, but is said to have suffered in France considerably from drought, so that the Provence will only have a weak medium crop—nothing can be said as yet about quality. There will be a good average crop of Turkestan alfalfa.

Kidney Vetch is offered in quantities from Austria. No information can be had yet from France.

THE CONVENTION.

[Paper read by George C. Watson before the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, September 4, 1906.]

Many a man has dug a cavity for the other fellow and fallen into the hole himself. Your committee on subjects last month assigned one to a seedsman, whose duty it was to report on the convention. Unfortunately for the committee, there were no Philadelphia seedsmen at the convention big enough for this job. J. Otto Thilow, of Dreer's, had intended to go, and had promised to make an address, but his plans had to be changed at the last minute. So you see the cavity! Somebody had to fill it! The rest of the committee insisted on my jumping in, and that must be my excuse for attempting—even in a remote way—to fill up this hole. I approach the subject with a meekness exceeding the meekness of Moses, and am very sorry we do not have the unacknowledged and original views of Mr. Thilow instead of the overworked and well-known notions of yours truly.

To my mind, the first and most important feature of a convention to a seedsman is the opportunity it affords him of meeting his customers. It must be remembered that the seedsman—and in using that term I mean it in the broadest sense—is the very opposite of a specialist. To be a seedsman in the proper sense, one must have a working knowledge of horticulture, floriculture, agriculture and arboriculture, because the seedsman is an auxiliary to all these different branches of the art of gardening. You will observe that I dignify the art of gardening by embracing under it the culinary, the ornamental, the farm, and the forest. Loudon did so, and no more illustrious example could be followed. To be a gardener in the true sense of that term, one must have a working knowledge of all these four great sub-divisions of the art, and as the seedsman is the auxiliary and helper in the same field, it follows that he also must be equally well posted, so as to fulfil his proper functions with ease and dexterity. Therefore the seedsman, as I said before, is the very opposite of a specialist. He is all-embracing. But that is the strongest reason why he should be present at a convention of specialists like that of the Society of American Florists. There he comes in personal contact with his customers, gaining valuable knowledge from their experience with various specialties, in which he has a direct pecuniary interest. He is able also to get a line on what is lacking, and can lay his plans for future progress, thus becoming not only an auxiliary, but a pioneer in the onward march of the art of gardening. I have made it a point to attend as many of these conventions as I could during the last twenty years, and I have never regretted having done so. In fact, I consider it impossible to become thoroughly posted in the profession of a seedsman without taking in as many as possible of these and other conventions bearing on any phase or branch of the art of gardening.

The second and less important phase of this subject from the seedsman's standpoint is the actual and immediate business that can be transacted. From my own experience and from what I have heard of that of others, the imme-mediate business returns are not adequate in proportion to the expense, and moreover, unless a good exhibit is put up they will be almost nil. If one goes to a convention for purely business reasons, rather than for the purpose of keeping posted, a good exhibit is indispensable. Quite a number of our most wide-awake houses keep regularly making such displays, year in and year out, and they must find it pays them either directly or indirectly, else they would not keep it up. At the same time there can be no gainsaying the fact that a great many of our prominent seed houses are not represented. Whether it be indifference, lack of time, or what, I do not know; but I feel sure many of them need stirring up on this very subject. I can remember well how surprised I was in Buffalo in 1901, when not a single one of the local seedsmen took advantage of the grand chance of making an exhibit at the minimum of cost. I was ashamed of them. And this apathy prevails today. The seed trade wants shaking up on this point. Imagine what a grand show Burpee could make with sweet peas, for instance, or Maule with dahlias, or Thorburn, or Henderson, with a general collection of their specialties. I hope to see full advantage taken by such firms in the exhibition of 1907.

In conclusion I may say that for extent, excellence, and variety the Dayton exhibition compared very favorably with those of recent years. There was at least one local seedsman who put up an exhibit, and the Livingston Seed Co., of the neighboring city of Columbus, had a very interesting display of tomatoes—the subject that has made the name of Livingston famous—besides some good new hybrids of Begonia semperflorens.

[Mr. Watson is in error as to the tomatoes; they were from Wm. Sim, Cliftondale, Mass.—Ed.]

Business is fairly good for this time of the year; it will soon be brisk again; a visit from Jack Frost will start the ball rolling.

Various Notes.

The last monthly meeting of the state florists' association, held September 4, was one of the most interesting held in a long time. It was on the lines of an experience meeting, and covered a good many subjects, from horse raising to the latest method of exterminating cutworms. H. Junge took a prominent part in both discussions. He certainly has a sure shot plan for the cutworms, and they bother his violets no more; patent applied for.

Building operations for this season are nearly ended. Messrs. Hart, Petit, Brown and Rieman are all putting on the finishing touches. All other plants have been overhauled and are in good shape for what's coming to them.

The state fair commences September 10, and with fine weather a large attendance is assured. The floral exhibit will no doubt be as good as usual. The awards will be announced next week. There is generally keen competition for the premiums. S.

LEBANON, PA.—Local members of the trade are enjoying much prosperity, judging from the extent of the improvements they are making this season. C. D. and D. H. Mish, whose greenhouses are at Fourth and Chestnut streets and in South Lebanon township, with a store on Cumberland street, have just erected two new houses. Their specialty is carnations, and they ship most of them west. C. C. Yost, of South Sixth street, is also adding a new house, of truss roof construction, and will install a forty horse-power boiler. The new structure will have 4,500 square feet of glass. Mr. Yost has a store on North Eighth street.

in the previous meetings this year, contained many specimen plants. The orchid exhibit of Joseph A. Manda received a first-class certificate, while that of William Barr, A. W. Bodwell garden-er, in competition for the society's annual prizes, scored eighty-five points, and that of Lager & Hurrell twenty-three points. The judges were A. T. Caparn, Thomas Jones and Joseph A. Manda.

The meeting was addressed by Alexander Wallace, who, in taking up the subject of civic improvement, said much in regard to these features at the recent meeting of the S. A. F. at Dayton, and also urged the sending of representatives

LEBANON, PA.—Local members of the trade are enjoying much prosperity, judging from the extent of the improvements they are making this season. C. D. and D. H. Mish, whose greenhouses are at Fourth and Chestnut streets and in South Lebanon township, with a store on Cumberland street, have just erected two new houses. Their specialty is carnations, and they ship most of them west. C. C. Yost, of South Sixth street, is also adding a new house, of truss roof construction, and will install a forty horse-power boiler. The new structure will have 4,500 square feet of glass. Mr. Yost has a store on North Eighth street.

BLATCHFORD'S FERTILIZERS.

J. W. Barwell is the proprietor of Blatchford's fertilizer works, established at Leicester, England, in 1800 and located in a new factory built at Waukegan, Ill., just 100 years later. He does a large business in land renovator and sells to the florists' trade a "plant grower" which he asserts is the purest, most honest and most economical florists' fertilizer on the market. He says that: "In the proportion of thirty pounds well mixed with a sufficient quantity of good, loamy, friable soil to fill a bench five inches deep, five feet wide and 100 feet long, this produces a quick, vigorous growth of plants that is astonishing to those florists who have never used a readily soluble fertilizer." It is put up in bulk for growers, but the supply houses handle it in 1-pound tin cans for retailing to those who wish fertilizer for house plants.

VIEW, as it puts us in touch with those have stock to sell.—J. H. HUFFORD,

We Take to the Auto.

Returning from the country, where we had been to inspect the hop fields, and incidentally to pitch hay and saw wood for muscular development, we have once more become adjusted to city life. The doctor has given us a certificate of perfect health and we have also won the wager we started out to win, a new twenty horse-power automobile. The efficiency of the machine was thoroughly tested in a 30-mile spin when we finished our visits among the growers.

No name is more familiar, and no firm has done more for the advancement of horticulture in the northwest, than Clarke Bros. Coming from Ohio sixteen years ago, they soon after established business in a small way at South Mount Tabor, where the Indians then hunted bears in the tall timber, and where on the same site now stand 60,000 feet of glass, a fit testimonial to thrift and industry. They were the first to issue a retail plant catalogue on the coast, beginning ten years ago with a small edition. The success of this special branch of their business has been almost phenomenal, and they are now sending out 25,000 copies annually, having recently added seeds and bulbs. We saw some 35,000 rose plants being potted up for delivery next spring, and other young stock in proportion. The retail cut flower trade has received the same attention, being well advertised through the medium of a neatly illustrated catalogue.

An important adjunct to this firm is the range of glass at Fruitvale, Cal., where Mr. Clarke, Sr., and Ralph Clarke reside. In addition to their horticultural talent the Clarke family are quite musically inclined. The youngest daughter has returned to Germany to complete her musical education. Frank will spend the next few months in the east studying under a noted instructor, and George, of Alaska fame, possesses a fine tenor voice and high aspirations, too. Bert will assume the entire responsibility of the business here, dividing his time between the store and the greenhouses.

Jumping a high barbed wire fence, we lit right in the center of Prof. Steele's pansy beds. Prof. Steele is principal of one of our schools, and is an expert on pansy culture, disposing of 75,000 plants at retail every spring. All Europe is ransacked for the best seed, and being personally acquainted with Emperor William, Mr. Steele is favored every year with a packet of the choicest from the royal gardens.

An entire stranger to us was M. M. Confrey, at Ivanhoe, who owns 10,000 feet of glass. His principal stock in trade this season is tomatoes, and we can vouch for the quality of them. Mr. Confrey says he devours everything in the trade papers, and will eventually branch out with cut flower growing.

Two blocks south the Hybrid Rose Co., Robinson Bros., with an amount of glass equal to Mr. Confrey's, have supplied the wholesale trade with some fine stock for a number of years. They have acted wisely in planting almost their whole place to violets, for we much prefer the home-grown article to those shipped in from the south.

After partaking of light refreshments we steered our machine back to the city by way of Tenth street, and halted in front of J. G. Holden's place. We have not seen 6,000 feet of glass utilized to a better advantage, and the effervescent good nature of the proprietor is convincing that he knows how to get many dollars' worth out of it. With a store in connection and roses planted on both sides of the walk, it presents a most creditable appearance; Portland has several such places.

Judging from the thrifty condition of the stock seen at all places visited, it is safe to predict that there will not be a scarcity of anything the coming winter.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

After having the street-car system of the town tied up by a strike for the last ten days, the parties interested finally came to an understanding, and traffic was again resumed. The effect of the strike has been disastrous to the florists, and the last week has been as quiet as anything ever experienced by the dealers here. Owing to the difficulty experienced by the growers in getting into town on the suburban lines, there have been but few flowers offered to the stores, and it was just as well, for there was little doing among the retailers.

Every one now has hopes that affairs will resume their normal shape in a short time, and that a good demand will be shown for stock. The prices have suffered considerably on everything. Asters have been a drug, sweet peas likewise, and but little call for carnations and roses. The florists are located to a great extent almost at the edge of the burned district, and the fact that car communication was cut off isolated them from both the buyers and the growers. The telephone system is not as yet in a satisfactory condition, and this also helped to make it difficult for the retailers to handle their orders.

It is a noteworthy fact that almost all the stores are now advertising in the daily newspapers. This is entirely different from the old-fashioned way in vogue before the fire. I counted about ten advertisements in one of our morning papers, and this is more than I remember seeing in all the San Francisco papers combined for at least twenty years before the quake.

Mrs. Shepherd has resided in Ventura since 1873, and her name is well known to flower lovers all over the United States. Her gardens constitute one of the show places of southern California.

After various changes in their plans, the Ladies' Improvement Club has finally decided to give a chrysanthemum show in San Rafael on October 20.

CARE OF SPECIMEN PLANTS.

I have found that under ordinary conditions the months of August and September are the best in the year for the removing of large specimen trees from the ground and their replanting in boxes. This is especially true of palms, and as much of our large stock is handled in this way, a few suggestions might be in order. It is impossible to get as large a specimen to grow up in a box as it can be done with a plant in the open ground, and for this reason it is more desirable to grow the trees in the nursery until they are of salable sizes. One plan is first to soak the ground thoroughly around the tree for several hours, then let it stand for a couple of days, and tie the branches in securely. Have the ball of earth made long and narrow instead of flat and wide, as is often done by gardeners. This is an important item, as there is always much less danger of splitting and breaking, and the ball of earth will at the same time go in a much smaller tub.

I have found it is a splendid plan to replant trees in a lattice frame house for about four weeks after they are taken from the open, and before they are placed in the tubs. By this method I rarely lose any palms. They occasionally may lose a leaf or two, and if they act as though they would be unsalable from any cause they can be planted out again in the nursery instead of boxing them.

After the plants have stood about four weeks in a shade house and it is possible to see which if any of them are not acting well, the others can be taken out of the ground without breaking the ball of earth and easily shifted into tubs. They will then be perfectly safe to sell at any time.

The old method of taking up a palm from the open ground, putting it in a box and selling it the same day, has had the effect of making many people chary of buying specimen trees, as in many instances the trees died. With any of the species of fan palms grown here, I have had almost invariable success, although I usually trim off some of the lower branches when I transplant them. This is not necessary with Chamærops excelsa, as it is certainly the easiest to transplant of all our palms. But it is the various varieties of washingtonias to which I particularly refer.

With Phoenix Canariensis and reclinata much care must be exercised, for while these trees are easy to handle when they get established, they are, on the other hand, difficult to take from the open ground and transplant directly to a box. This intermediate step of which I spoke seems to have solved the difficulty for me, and I do not usually have to discard over two per cent of the trees I take out of the ground. I leave the branches well tied in to the trunk, and do not trim off any leaves. I give them a good sprinkling several times a day, and see that the soil is kept wet. This may seem like considerable trouble to go to, but I have found that it is a well paying proposition in the handling of palms of large sizes. G.

GOSHEN, IND.—The Colonial Flower Shop has been opened by Miss Brown, at 304 South Main street. Modern fixtures for a store of this kind and a completely redecorated room make an attractive place.

DAYTON, O.—Joseph I. Schoeffer, of Madriver township, is rapidly recovering from a severe attack of lockjaw, caused by a wound on one of his fingers. The patient went through all the stages of the terrible disease, and at one time his life was despaired of. The persistent use of anti-tetanic serum was his only salvation, and he will soon be able to be around again.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

THE apple-growing industry of the Pacific northwest is having rapid development.

G. A. NIDY, of La Junta, Colo., is thinking of starting a nursery at Delta, in that state.

JACKSON & PERKINS Co., Newark, N. Y., are now American agents for Wm. Fell & Co., Hexham, England.

THE peony specialists report a big fall business. Early planting is recommended for those who want to make the most of next season's growth.

J. B. WILD recently withdrew from the firm of J. B. Wild & Bros., Sarcoxie, Mo., the business being continued by the remaining members as Wild Bros. Nursery Co.

A. P. GAGGE, landscape architect, 156 Fifth avenue, New York, visited Chicago this week in search of stock for an $18,000 contract he is executing at Columbus, O.

THE farm of 540 acres occupied by the Hart Pioneer Nursery, Fort Scott, Kan., now in the hands of a receiver, has been sold and will be cleared of nursery stock.

THE fall business in hardy perennials will show another increase this season. Many florists are making plantations for cutting for summer stock and for show, to help sales.

H. S. GRAVES, of Gainesville, Fla., is making a specialty of the pecan. His catalogue contains several pages of planting and cultural directions, as well as varietal descriptions.

W. H. WYMAN, of the Bay State Nurseries, N. Abington, Mass., will build a summer cottage in Maine next season. He has bought ten acres of land in Canton, on the shores of Anasaguntacook lake.

It is suggested that uniform grading of nursery stock be obtained by having a committee of well-known men prepare rules for measuring trees, the American Association of Nurserymen then to endorse or adopt the document.

METHODS OF GROWING.

[A paper by T. R. Peyton, read before the Missouri State Horticultural Society, continued from the Review of September 6.]

Root-grafting.

Root-grafting is the setting of a scion upon a root. This operation is performed during the winter, and the grafts are packed in moss fiber and stored away in a well-ventilated cellar, to remain there until spring. If the entire root is used, the operation might probably be called whole-root grafting. But inasmuch as the common method of planting grafts and stocks for budding is performed with a tool about eight inches in length, called a dibble, it would not be practical to undertake to plant the entire root of a

No. 1 straight apple stock (many of which are twelve to fourteen inches long) with a tool only eight inches long.

Therefore, this method of whole-root grafting, which has been talked so much about for the last eighteen years, is, to the writer's personal knowledge, as a practical propagator, purely a business proposition and calculated to deceive.

What is generally termed a whole-root graft among nurserymen is the first cut of collar graft, using about five inches of the root, and about a 4-inch scion, making the entire length of the graft eight to nine inches. But the average tree planter is ignorant on this subject, and is laboring under the mistaken idea that some nurseries use the entire stock.

This method, as we have stated, is not practical, and is not being used by any of our nurserymen. If only a portion of the root is used as stock, the operation is properly piece-root grafting.

It is apparent that the various pieces made of the root may not be comparable. The top piece includes the crown, at which point the scion is inserted. The lowest piece comprises the tip, or smallest, and therefore weakest, portion of the root. It is evident that there are two distinct problems concerned in the consideration of the comparative merits of budded and root-grafted trees. One has to do with the comparison of the budding with the grafting, and the other with the different methods of trimming or cutting the stocks.

Budding versus Root-grafting.

It is perfectly well known that in general, budding and grafting are equally efficacious methods of propagation, other things being equal. In other words, the mere fact that one tree comes from a bud and another from a scion should make no necessary difference in the value of the tree. All the characteristic differences between budded and root-grafted trees are due to the methods of trimming the stocks, and not to the actual methods of propagation. The whole question, therefore, is one of comparative length, and strength of roots (or stocks).

A whole-rooted tree should be stronger and have a more symmetrical root system at a given age than a piece-rooted tree. Yet, there have been frauds committed in the name of whole-rooted trees. As a matter of fact, there can be no perfectly whole-rooted trees, unless the bud or scion is set upon a seedling stock which stands in its original position, for some of the main axis is broken off in the process of digging.

If the pieces of roots are very short in the making of root grafts, the graft has too little power to enable it to make a strong growth in the first year. It is a common practice with nurserymen, especially in the North, where the growing season is short, to cut off the entire top of root-grafted trees at the end of the first season, in order to get a strong and straight body the following year. This practice is perfectly justifiable, only that the grower counts the age of his tree from the date of the grafting.

Root-grafted trees are very liable to make such short growth the first season that if the terminal bud should be winter-killed, the tree will branch too low, or if a leader starts from a lateral bud, the body will be crooked.

A good nurseryman always wants his first season's growth to be high enough to form the entire body of the tree. At the same actual age, and grown under the same conditions as to soil and cultivation, the budded tree is nearly always larger than the root-grafted trees as ordinarily grown. The larger and better the piece of root upon which the graft is made, however, the less the difference will be.

the best nursery trees is the selection of scions and buds, and this has been agitated in the last few years to the extent that some growers are now advertising "pedigreed" trees, and we need not be surprised in the near future to hear some growers making the claim that they are having their trees registered, and can furnish you a written certificate of pedigree with each individual tree, notwithstanding the fact that they gather the buds and scions indiscriminately from trees of which they know nothing whatever as to parentage. It is plain to be seen, then, that this idea of pedigreed trees and plants is evidently akin to whole-root trees, so far as the intrinsic value of the tree or plant is concerned, and as we have stated, is purely a business proposition.

The writer is a strong advocate of the selection of scions and buds, and he believes the best nursery trees are grown from scions and buds, taken from young and healthy bearing trees, which we know to be true to name, and which we know to be prolific bearers, as far as it is possible to do so. But he does not believe it makes any material difference as to whether the parents of the tree from which we take scions and buds have any record or not, so long as the tree from which we are propagating is a good individual.

NEW PINK CARNATION FOR 1907

Color—A peculiar shade of lovely pink, with a faint yellowish cast; several shades lighter than the Lawson. Unlike most pinks, the brightest sun does not injure the color. Size—3 to 4 inches in diameter when established. Odor—Pleasing, but not strong. Stems—Invariably strong, but always graceful, ranging from 12 to 30 inches during the season. Habit, etc.—A very quick, active grower, making specimen plants in a short time, even from late cuttings. On account of its rapid growth, requires supporting very soon after benching. Gets away rapidly, blooms early and gives long stems right from the start. Productiveness—Prodigious is the best word we know of to use here. It is the most incessant bloomer, early and late, we have ever grown. Stock limited. Delivery January 5 to 10 and later. Price $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

The condition of the market remains about the same as at last report, except the improvement in roses. Some good Brides and Maids are coming in, although the stems are short. The flowers in roses are good, considering that they are cut from young stock. Few good carnations are on the market. Dahlias are scarce. All the dahlia growers seem discouraged, as they don't pay. The season for gladioli is over, and there is nothing left to make a show in the windows but ferns and small palms until the chrysanthemums come in.

Various Notes.

James Payne has everything looking thrifty. His carnations, which were planted in the early part of July, are fine.

A. G. Belinder, of this city, owns ten acres of the best land in Missouri, southwest of Westport. He has built two large greenhouses on this land, one for roses, the other for carnations. They are heated by steam; for fuel they have natural gas, supplied by a well on the place. These houses are leased to Mr. Hammalod and Mr. Carson, Chicago, Ill. It is their intention to wholesale their stock this year, as only cut flowers are grown. We wish them success.

W. H. Humfeld says business is fine this week. Two large weddings in one day and a lot of funeral work have kept him busy.

C. Hite, with the W. L. Rock Flower Co., has everything looking fine. Some of his Monrovia mums are heavy in buds, and the 30,000 carnations are in splendid condition. They have a new white carnation that surpasses everything for size in this state. BUSY.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.—The market gardeners and fruit growers gave a picnic and outing Wednesday, August 29, at Idora park. To advertise the event, they had a parade on the day before, with decorated wagons and other special features to attract attention. Several thousand ears of corn were roasted, to be served free at the outing.

TOPEKA, KAN.—An interesting window in the store of Mrs. J. E. Lord, on West Eighth street, which is attracting much attention, has for its center-piece a miniature stagecoach. The vehicle is a perfect model of the early stagecoaches, and was made in 1811 by Mrs. Lord's grandfather. The coach has an artistic setting of palms and ferns.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

Trade has been quiet the last week. Good shipping stock in roses and carnations finds a ready sale, but there are large quantities of short and inferior grades of stock sold in bulk at any respectable offer. Asters are coming in heavy just now. The last week the supply doubled up and prices correspondingly dropped. Up to that time they were bringing a good average. American Beauties and lilies are doing about the best in the way of returns, and keep cleaned up at good figures. Carnations are improving in quality, but are still short-stemmed.

Various Notes.

There will be a florists' picnic next Sunday in a grove adjoining the C. C. Pollworth Co. greenhouses. All florists and their families are invited.

William Edlefsen returned from a trip to Denver recently.

Considerable space was given in the local papers in reference to the remarks of E. G. Eggeling, of St. Louis, who was a delegate to the Eagles' convention here recently. Mr. Eggeling asserted that Milwaukee beer was too warm and not kept properly on ice, and wondered how Milwaukee became famous on this product when they didn't know how to keep it. Well, the Eagles were pretty warm birds, so perhaps the bottles were not quite cold enough.

INCOG.

NEW CASTLE, IND.—The four local greenhouse firms all have obtained a good start for the winter. There are over 100 miles of benches in the combined establishments of the four large growers. During the summer three of the firms have each added a number of houses, and their capacity has been increased one-third.

Notes of Local Growers.

Most all of the growers here have all their season's work completed. Weiland & Olinger have most of their carnations housed. They are in first-class condition. This firm grows most all of its stock in the field, with the best results. Their roses are also in good condition.

The Benthley-Coatsworth Co. grows almost all old tea roses, having given up Beauties last season. Their Richmonds are in fine shape.

William Dittmann's new houses are the largest in town, and are fine. They are built high, and get all the light possible. They are planted to Beauties, which are in excellent condition. His old range is planted in Brides and Maids, and these also are in fine shape.

At Heller Bros.' everything is in the usual fine shape. This firm has the largest range of glass in town, over 250,000 feet of glass. Their Beauties are in excellent condition and are already producing 36-inch stems. Their Bride, Maid, Richmond, Chatenay and Killarney are in the pink of condition, and are sure to bring bountiful crops the coming season. They have two houses of second-year Richmonds that promise great results.

This firm also has a large mail order business. Although they have been in this business only a few years, they have built up a fine trade with all parts of the country. At present they have over 350,000 roses growing in the field, and possibly another 200,000 young propagated plants under glass. Among the latter we noticed a batch of over 6,000 of the new rambler Lady Gay, which has created such a sensation everywhere. It is a vast improvement over Dorothy Perkins.

Their 25,000 carnations are grown in the house all summer, Mr. Heller claiming they get much better stock, and earlier, than by growing in the field. They have all the standard sorts, with several promising seedlings and imported varieties. Queen and Bountiful are grown for white, but the firm likes Queen the better. One house of Lawson is in fine condition, also two houses of Enchantress. A visit to this interesting establishment is time well spent.

UTICA, MICH.—On account of ill health, C. R. Kidd has decided to discontinue his business here.

BEAVER, PA.—W. S. Kidd has just completed an addition 9x60 feet to his greenhouses. He will use the space for ferns and palms. He will begin work soon on an extension to his potting-shed.

Watch Us Grow

ARAUCARIAS, the best decorative plants Nature produces, our specialty.

Every man in business and life, to be successful, must adopt one thing as his specialty and that specialty, of whatever nature it may be, he must guard, study and push to such an extent that it not only benefits himself but he must continue it so every one who seeks his aid, services or his article, which he advertises or practices, will share a slice of his activity and prosperity. I made the importation and cultivation of araucarias a special study in my life. The figures below will show my success in business from the first year: by commencing with an importation of 250 and now, the eleventh year, my importation has grown up to 6,100 (come and see it), the reason being that the araucaria grows yearly more in favor with the plant consuming people all over the country, as a most admired decorative plant for the parlor, bed-room, dining and sitting-rooms, stores and hotels, lawns and porches. The outlook will be of an importation of at least 8,100 to 10,000 in spring of 1907. To secure this vast amount for 1907, I left Hoboken Aug. 15, starting for Belgium, to make contracts for next year. I shall also bring over with me at the same time a large lot of choice Azalea Indica and Palms, etc., for Christmas and Easter forcing. No money will be spared to secure for my customers the cream of the Belgium greenhouses only.

Please note lowest prices for September.

Araucaria Excelsa, 12 to 14 inches high, 5½-in. pots 3 to 4 tiers, 2 yrs. old, 50c. 14 to 16 inches high 5½ in. pots, 3 to 4 tiers, 2 yrs. old, 60c. 16 to 18 inches high, 5½ to 6-in. pots, 4 to 5 tiers, 3 yrs. old, 75c. 18 to 20 inches high, 6-in. pots, 5 to 6 tiers, 4 yrs. old, $1.00. 20 to 24 inches high, 6-in. pots, 5 to 6 tiers, 4 yrs. old $1.25. 36 to 50 inches high, specimens, 7-in. pots, 6 yrs. old, $2.50 to $3.00.

Araucaria Compacta Robusta, have 1000 of them. Never were they as nice as this year. Plants are as broad as long, from 12 to 20 inches in height, 3 to 4 perfect tiers, 20 to 30 inches across from tip of one tier to the other, 3, 4 and 5 yrs. old 6 to 7-in. pots, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75 to $2.00, up to $1.00 each.

Araucaria Excelsa Glauca, perfect jewels in shape and size, their beautiful greenish blue tiers give them such a striking appearance, that anyone seeing them must fall in love with them on sight. Plants, 6 to 7 in. pots, 3, 4, 5 perfect tiers, 15 to 25 inches in height, from 15 to 30 inches across, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75, $2.00 to $2.50 each. Please bear in mind that the above mentioned varieties are the cream of Belgium's productions. We have thousands of them and can meet all demands.

Notes of Local Growers.

Most all of the growers here have all their season's work completed. Weiland & Olinger have most of their carnations housed. They are in first-class condition. This firm grows most all of its stock in the field, with the best results. Their roses are also in good condition.

The Benthley-Coatsworth Co. grows almost all old tea roses, having given up Beauties last season. Their Richmonds are in fine shape.

William Dittmann's new houses are the largest in town, and are fine. They are built high, and get all the light possible. They are planted to Beauties, which are in excellent condition. His old range is planted in Brides and Maids, and these also are in fine shape.

At Heller Bros.' everything is in the usual fine shape. This firm has the largest range of glass in town, over 250,000 feet of glass. Their Beauties are in excellent condition and are already producing 36-inch stems. Their Bride, Maid, Richmond, Chatenay and Killarney are in the pink of condition, and are sure to bring beautiful crops the coming season. They have two houses of second-year Richmonds that promise great results.

This firm also has a large mail order business. Although they have been in this business only a few years, they have built up a fine trade with all parts of the country. At present they have over 350,000 roses growing in the field, and possibly another 200,000 young propagated plants under glass. Among the latter we noticed a batch of over 6,000 of the new rambler Lady Gay, which has created such a sensation everywhere. It is a vast improvement over Dorothy Perkins.

Their 25,000 carnations are grown in the house all summer, Mr. Heller claiming they get much better stock, and earlier, than by growing in the field. They have all the standard sorts, with several promising seedlings and imported varieties. Queen and Bountiful are grown for white, but the firm likes Queen the better. One house of Lawson is in fine condition, also two houses of Enchantress. A visit to this interesting establishment is time well spent.

ARAUCARIAS, the best decorative plants Nature produces, our specialty.

Every man in business and life, to be successful, must adopt one thing as his specialty and that specialty, of whatever nature it may be, he must guard, study and push to such an extent that it not only benefits himself but he must continue it so every one who seeks his aid, services or his article, which he advertises or practices, will share a slice of his activity and prosperity. I made the importation and cultivation of araucarias a special study in my life. The figures below will show my success in business from the first year: by commencing with an importation of 250 and now, the eleventh year, my importation has grown up to 6,100 (come and see it), the reason being that the araucaria grows yearly more in favor with the plant consuming people all over the country, as a most admired decorative plant for the parlor, bed-room, dining and sitting-rooms, stores and hotels, lawns and porches. BALTIMORE.

The Market.

At last the jubilee week is at hand, and it is hoped that the florists will reap some benefit from the crowds that will visit the city. However, the street flower boys get the harvest generally, and thousands of button-hole bouquets will be sold.

Business has been brisk. Lexington market looks its best, and cut flowers have been in demand. The Eutaw street buildings have hampered some of the florists to a great extent, but are now nearly completed, and the florists feel that when they get their old stands back they will be at home again.

Various Notes.

R. Vincent & Son, White Marsh, Md., will hold their annual dahlia exhibition Wednesday, September 19. The Baltimore Gardeners' Club and the Washington Florists' Club have been invited to attend, and will be met at Cowenton by Mr. Vincent. An exhibition of cut dahlias and flowers will be made and blooming plants in the fields. All interested in flowers are invited to go. Exhibits will be made by Griffith & Turner Co., and H. F. Michell.

John Donn has purchased from J. Smith, Landsdowne, Me., his stall in Lexington market.

M. J. Hannigan, florist for James Carey, Catonsville, Md., has a fine new variety of coleus, La Venia Janes, a sport from Progress. It is a dwarf variety, and he claims it is extra fine for borders.

C. M. Ackerman has leased the greenhouses from Mrs. B. A. McRoberts, Govanstown. He has 12,000 Harrisii lilies planted, and will carry on business on a large scale. J. L. T.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—The Lord & Burnham Co. has been awarded the contract for a range of plant houses at Humboldt park, their bid being lowest at $8,215.

WOONSOCKET, R. I.—Mrs. J. A. Staples has moved her store from the Staples drug store to 138 Main street. Increased business necessitated the change. Mrs. Staples has conducted a flower store here for several years.

Scores of Florists Use

HAMMOND'S GRAPE DUST

Chrysanthemums and Carnations

This comes from WALLACE GOMERSALL, late superintendent of the famous "Wodenethe," owned and finely maintained by Winthrop Sargent, Esq., Fishkill-on-Hudson, N. Y.:

"For Chrysanthemums we use GRAPE DUST with the best results by freely dusting with it until the delicate blooms come, then we are a bit shy of it, to prevent any staining of the petals, but during the green state, even in bad weather, there is no trace of fungus, and we keep free of the spot. I have recommended it to many gardeners, and so far my acquaintances have found it very valuable. In common with many gardeners and florists I have found it of great value in checking the rust on carnations. It is not expensive to use, for by using in air bellows it diffuses itself everywhere, and is, in my judgment, a valuable every day article. For roses it is of exceptional benefit against mildew."

How to Use "GRAPE DUST" for VIOLETS, ROSES, etc., in the Greenhouse.

Fill the house with dust as soon as the plants are set, and let it settle over the plants, or put one pound to a pail of water and spray it finely over everything, plants, ground, benches, etc. Spores are likely to settle anywhere about, and prevention is the best remedy. Its fineness, its reliability, and its great diffusiveness combine to make GRAPE DUST take the highest rank as a popular and economical fungicide, and no mistake about it.

GRAVITY SYSTEM.

Can condensation be returned by gravity under the following conditions? The pressure is ten pounds. The farthest end of the main return is 425 feet from the boiler. From this point to within 175 feet of the boiler there is a fall of seven to eight feet; from the latter point to within thirty-five feet of the boiler but a few inches fall; in the last thirty-five feet I could drop one to two feet. If this is not practical, can you suggest a plan to return by gravity, with a maximum drop of nine to ten feet for the whole 425 feet? T. F. B.

If it were possible to reverse the conditions existing in your plant, there could be no question in regard to the success of a gravity system. Even under existing conditions I think the plan can be made to work all right. If the boiler can be lowered so as to get eighteen inches fall in the last 175 feet, and still keep the main return above the level of the top of the shell of the boiler, through all the house and until all the returns have been collected into it, so there can be no chance for back water in any of the returns, it can then be dropped to or below the level of the water in the boiler with no ill effects upon the circulation. Keep all the returns, except a few feet of the main return near the boiler, as far above the level of the water in the boiler as possible, and still maintain a uniform fall, as rapid as possible, in the pipes. L. C. C.

VEGETABLE HOUSE.

I have built one house 16x60 feet, 4-foot side walls, 9-foot ridge, which I intend to use to raise lettuce and cucumbers. To heat this house I have an eight horse-power boiler, horizontal fire-box kind. I intend to run a 2-inch pipe through the center of my house to the far end, and return through three 1 1/4-inch pipes on each wall. Will that be enough to heat it? I shall regulate the steam in accordance with the weather to a certain extent. L. J. M.

No, the six 1 1/4-inch pipes you mention will not be safe for severe weather in Indiana. I do not think it would be wise to attempt to run this house with steam, the coils arranged on the outside walls, with less than five pipes in each coil, i. e., ten 1 1/4-inch pipes for the Dear Sirs: Replying to your letter of the 2nd inst., regarding your Eclipse Boiler I installed in my greenhouses two years ago, will say that the boiler is giving me best of satisfaction. At the same time I installed your boiler, I built an addition to my greenhouses with about 3000 sq. ft. of glass, and the first winter I saved $75.00 in fuel. This is a very large saving when you consider that I heated 3000 sq. ft. additional glass and at the same time saved $75.00 on fuel, and if I were to install another boiler, I certainly would have no other than your Eclipse." BOARD PARTITIONS.

I have a short-span-to-the-south house 18x80 feet. I intend to build a new house 20x80 inside measure. It will be connected to the old house. I am thinking of making my walls of cement or grout, and will leave a 1-inch board in the center of the outside wall to overcome the radiation of heat. Would that be practicable?

Great Grates.

As fast as old grate bars are burned out many growers are putting in the Martin rocking grate. The call for this grate is largely increased by the fact that the growers who have used it for one or more seasons are almost without exception equipping other boilers with it. The grate costs considerably more than the stationary bars, but is figured to make a decided saving in fuel, and that is what all the growers are after.

heater; the grate surface is 24x36 inches. Temperature often goes 20 to 25 degrees below zero. G. F. P.

I do not think it will be practicable to make a complete board partition between the two layers of grout in the wall. Vacant spaces, however, are desirable, and can be provided for by using upright forms in the center of the wall, which can be covered with paper when the form is set, and as the concrete hardens the form is withdrawn, leaving a hollow space in the wall. These air chambers will be better non-conductors than the board partition. The boards can be used if at intervals a board is left out so as to allow a space for bonding the wall. A 12-inch bonding strip every three or four feet will be sufficient. The house 20x80 feet can be piped for carnations by using ten runs of 2-inch pipe, providing the side walls are not more than four feet six inches high. Two coils of five pipes each, in which one pipe is a flow, should be sufficient to heat the house. This arrangement provides for two 2-inch flows and eight 2-inch returns, four return pipes in each of two coils, or otherwise distributed under the benches. L. C. C.

TWO LONG HOUSES.

I have two houses running east and west, with the boiler pit at the east end, six feet below the greenhouse floor. One of the houses is 10x102 feet, 4-foot wall, 8-foot ridge. The other house is 16x102, 4-foot wall, 9-foot ridge. I want to heat them by hot water, running both flow and return under the benches. The land slopes four feet in 100 feet, to the east. ation. I want to use one expansion tank and locate it in the potting-shed, about eight feet above the system. What size flow pipes will I need, and how many, in order to get 55 to 60 degrees in zero weather? I want to use 2-inch pipe for the returns. F. A. C.

The 10-foot house can be heated by six 2-inch pipes. These can probably be best arranged as two coils, each consisting of a flow and two returns, arranged either under the benches or along the side walls. The 16-foot house requires nine lines of pipe, which can also be arranged in two coils if so desired. A manifold of five pipes on the most exposed side and one of four pipes on the most sheltered side, one of the pipes in each group serving as a flow pipe, is the best plan. L. C. C.

VENTS AND STEAM TRAP.

Our present range is 77x112 feet. We have our boiler above grade, and use a Hippard standard steam trap. The boiler is at the northeast corner. We wish to build an addition on the west, and a larger one on the south, both of them farther from the boiler than the present range. In each house, our plan is to run the flow pipe along the side nearest the boiler, then cross the houses in the coils, returning in a pipe down the opposite side of the ranges. In the new houses can the returns be emptied into a common main return, depending on the trap to remove the air from all, or do we need separate vents? If the latter, how should the piping be done? The south pipes in our present houses do not heat properly in the coldest weather.

D. F. Co.

It is unfortunate that your flow and return pipes can not be made to change places. In general, it is better to carry live steam to the most distant point in the plant before beginning the distribution. When this is done the water of condensation constantly moves toward the boiler, which brings it back by the shortest route and at a higher temperature, which is a decided advantage.

In regard to heating the new houses, I think it will prove most satisfactory if independent return pipes are installed to return the condensation from these houses direct to the hot well. This should be near the boiler, and low enough so that all condensation will return to it rapidly. If this is a tight well, say a piece of 8-inch pipe two and a half to three feet long, capped at one end and bushed at the other to admit returns and exhaust pipe from the trap, there should be no difficulty.

Each system, however, will require air vents, in fact every coil of pipe should be vented so as to be certain at all times that the circulation is complete. Without plenty of vents great care is necessary in grading the pipes, to prevent buckles and traps, which would impede the flow. With plenty of air vents such defects are overcome. It is desirable to have check valves on the returns between the hot well and the system, but not absolutely necessary to insure the successful operation of the trap.

L. C. C.

PIPING FOR SMALL HOUSE.

I wish to heat a house 15x50 to 50 degrees in zero weather. It is six feet to the eaves and twelve feet to the ridge. It is fifteen feet from the boiler, and has boarded walls with two feet of glass. How many runs of 2-inch pipe do I need, and how large a flow from the boiler? How much difference is there in the heating surface of 4-inch and 2-inch pipe?

C. E. A.

The house 15x50 feet can be heated by the use of ten lines of 2-inch pipe. If it is convenient to make two of these flow pipes and eight of them returns, two manifolds can be made to do the work. They can, however, be arranged to suit the bench arrangement of the house.

Each foot of 2-inch pipe has 621 thousandths of a square foot of heating surface, while each foot of 4-inch pipe has 1.178 thousandths square feet of heating surface.

HEATING ONE HOUSE.

How many runs of 1-inch pipe with pressure at from two to five pounds will it require to heat a house 21x60 feet, 7-foot walls and two glass gables, to 60 degrees in zero weather?

What is the practical relation between a cubic foot of space and a square foot of heating surface, or in other words, will one square foot of radiation heat one cubic foot of space, conditions being as used in good construction? How much heating surface is a lineal foot of 1-inch pipe? How do you figure to get the cubic feet in the gable part of a greenhouse?

G. L. P.

The house 21x60 should be provided with a 2-inch flow pipe under the ridge and nineteen 1-inch returns, arranged under the benches or along the side walls, as seems most desirable. One lineal foot of 1-inch pipe contains 344 thousandths of a square foot of heating surface. Greenhouse heating is not calculated on the basis of cubic contents, as is house heating, but upon surface exposure.

the system, which is at the end of the run. The fall is two inches in ten feet, with a 4-foot drop to the boiler.

Can I add one more 1½-inch pipe on each side, or will the 2-inch flow carry any additional returns? When firing hard in the winter, I find the return near the boiler apparently as hot as the flow. All my piping is under the benches.

A. V.

The 2-inch flows are ample to carry another 1½-inch return in each manifold. The addition of another 1½-inch pipe to each coil will give you a scant radiation for 60 degrees during severe weather. If you are growing cool stuff, this will probably be satisfactory; if running mixed stock, add two pipes to the coil on the most exposed side and one to the other.

L. C. C.

BOILER CAPACITY.

Please tell us what capacity of steam boiler it will take to heat the following houses:

Two rose houses, running east and west, each 26x100 feet, side walls five feet; houses are connected without partition walls, and we want to keep temperature at 62 degrees at night.

Two carnation houses, running north and south. One is 26x100, the other 21x100, with side walls five feet.

One plant house 27x100, with side walls five feet.

These three houses are all connected with partition walls. We want to run them with night temperature at 56 degrees. All these houses are nine feet to ridge-pole, except one rose house, which is fifteen feet.

S. S. B.

While 2,400 square feet of radiation will provide sufficient heat for these houses by using low pressure steam, it would not be safe or economical to install a boiler with less than 3,000 square feet capacity. It is never wise to economize on the boiler, and it is economical of fuel to have a boiler with ample capacity, rather than one which must be crowded to full capacity to do the work.

L. C. C.

PIPING TWO HOUSES.

I have two houses each 15x90 feet, connected, and running east and west. They are six and one-half feet to gutter and eleven feet to ridge, and are even-span. I want to have a temperature of 58 to 60 degrees, using steam. I have

TORONTO.

The Market.

Trade during September has shown a marked increase over the previous month, and nearly all the florists are wearing a cheerful expression. Beauties are coming in fairly plentifully, and other roses are quite equal to the demand. Asters and gladioli are running short. Carnations are coming in only in limited supply off the young stock.

The Guelph Convention.

The Toronto delegates who attended the Guelph convention speak highly of the treatment they received at the hands of the Guelph horticulturists. The handsome young ladies who served luncheon on the lawn of the Ontario Agricultural College were especially entertaining. A number of the delegates took advantage of the invitation extended by the Dale Estate, W. Fendley, and R. Jennings, of Brampton, to visit their greenhouses on their way down to Toronto. Here we found the greenhouses of the three establishments in the most up-to-date condition, and some of our American friends were heard to remark that they were equal to, and in many respects superior to, anything they had seen at home. The delegates were served with lemonade at the Dale Estate, and Mr. Duggan, the manager, explained that it was the strongest beverage allowed on the premises. After inspecting the greenhouses the delegates were taken to the hotel, where a substantial meal was in waiting. The delegates extended their thanks to Mr. Duggan and the other gentlemen for the kindness and courtesy they had shown them.

The Exhibition.

The display of flowers at our annual national exhibition is not perhaps so good as in former years. Especially can this be said of the quantity of design work. This year the competition has gone down to three exhibitors, and in many classes only one. One of our prominent exhibitors, J. S. Simmons, has been out of town for the last month. Some of the other exhibitors, who have always been on hand, did not make entries this year, and as there were no new ones to take their places it consequently cut down the number. In the design work, J. H. Dunlop captured all the firsts, while T. Manton and W. Holland divided the seconds. In cut flowers J. H. Dunlop got first for the collection of roses, and the Toronto Floral Co. second. In the individual class the Toronto Floral Co. got first, and J. H. Dunlop second.

The display of outdoor annuals and perennials was large, but the season seems to have been against a good many varieties, consequently the quality is not so good. In both classes of groups and individual plants, the display was large, and our private gardeners are to be congratulated on the interest they have taken, and the fine specimens they have exhibited. T. Manton captured his much coveted first prize for an arranged group of plants. The other prizes were well divided between Exhibition Park, Government House and Allan Gardens, and some of our private places. D. J.

MARKETING AT WHOLESALE....

Not an Academic Question.

The subject assigned to the essayists, namely, "The Best Method of Marketing the Product of the Wholesale Plant and Flower Growers," is the one of many that has in all probability caused many a grower to "pause, ponder and reflect." Strictly speaking—and in the words of the sage of Princeton, "It is not a theory, it is a condition that confronts the grower."

How best to market one's product is in no wise an academic question, nor is it one to be answered by an essayist in a manner satisfactory alike to all growers.

The subject, old and hackneyed though it is, lends itself nevertheless to a deal of serious thought and honest reflection. Since time immemorial, down to the present day, market conditions, the law of supply and demand, the merit of the product itself and a multitude of other reasons, both local and general, have been largely responsible for the various methods employed in marketing products.

Superior Product Sure of Market.

The manufacturer producing an article of superior merit need not rack his brains about devising methods of marketing it. He is sure of his market, despite the most ingenious methods employed by the host of his competitors to undermine his chances. His success is assured not because of some invisible, lucky star in the heavens above, as some are prone to think, but because of an earnest, honest and conscientious effort on his own part to achieve his success and to base it upon true merit, on this earth below. This is certain.

After all, what is success? Perhaps this question can best be answered in the words of Taine. Says the eminent Frenchman: "Success and failure are products, like vitriol and sugar." No methods, be they ever so clever and ingenious, can possibly win, unless founded upon true merit.

Approaching the subject from a nearer viewpoint, we can easily point out a number of growers who have achieved success, who have created a demand and a market for their product by the simple method of producing goods of superior quality. I lay stress upon the words simple method because the simplest methods are invariably the straightest and the surest in the end. It is a matter of record that high grade stock, be it roses, carnations or chrysanthemums, coming into our markets, is the first to leave the commission man's place, is the first to be disposed of by the retailer, that the so-called seconds are next in line, while flowers of an inferior quality and of questionable age either find their place in the waste barrel or else are offered to the public by the street vender at 10 cents per, or three dozen for a quarter. What is the result? It is simply this: The man producing goods of quality has at the same time evolved a splendid method of marketing his product, while he who lacks in the qualitative attribute stares failure in the face, pondering all the while upon means and ways and the best methods to "unload."

Selling Inferior Stock.

"To unload"—it would be hard to find another word in the English commercial vocabulary that is fraught with such sinister meaning alike to the pub-date methods employed in marketing or unloading such products, as a matter of course "the best that ever came out of a seed pod." How alluring the advertisements, how convincing indeed! And what are the results? How many of these "breadwinners" have stood the test of time? How many have proved meritorious enough to be worthy of a second year's trial?

One can easily count them on his fingers with some fingers to spare. What is wanted is less of the unloading proclivities and more of the genuine, old-fashioned honesty. There is no question, however, but that we are making rapid strides along the highway of progress, both material and moral. The day is well-nigh drawing to a close—and let us hope never to return—when questionable means were regarded as the alpha and omega of success. Experience has taught us to take broader views and to follow straighter paths.

Sound Business Methods Best.

But to return to the subject under

lic and to the one who bears the immediate or ultimate weight of its burden. To the former it means a bad bargain, dear at any price, while to the latter it means both financial loss in the end, plus loss of reputation almost at the start.

Thus both are the losers, the heavier one, however, being he with the "unloading" tendencies uppermost in his mind.

The history of our carnation seedlings during the last decade amply illustrates my idea. Who will question the up-to-consideration. Granted that the best method of marketing one's product is to be sought for and found in the greenhouse itself, the question nevertheless arises, how should the grower attend to both ends of his business?

While it is undeniably true that by "one's deeds one shall be judged"; in other words, that the quality of a grower's stock, coupled with his own honesty, reliability and business integrity, will soon win him a host of buyers, the fact must not be overlooked that present business conditions require a thorough business system; that no business, and much less that of the grower, can be conducted profitably unless all details are well mastered, unless every foot of space be turned to profit, unless every man on the place be made to do his full duty. To accomplish this task successfully—and it is by no means an easy one—one must, as a matter of necessity, give to it his entire time and undivided attention.

And right here I wish to draw the line between mere method and sound business system. While the former aims at accomplishing things as expediency and circumstances may require, often defeating its own end, unless based upon true merit, the underlying principle of the latter is the result of years of experience, reduced to a science.

The glib-tongued fakir, for example, has a splendid method of his own of marketing things to his own advantage. To bring the example nearer home, the itinerant nurseryman or agent offering to the uninitiated a native wild shrub for a Japanese novelty, guaranteed to be perfectly hardy, at a fancy price has the method right enough, but the fundamental principle of a sound business system is sadly lacking.

The history of the successful business man or manufacturer might be well studied with profit by most of us. Nor need we base our conclusions upon mere speculation, when facts are on the surface. The successful business man is he who so systematizes his business, that every department, be it large or small, can show at a glance wherein the profits or the losses lie. A business without a system is like a ship without a rudder, drifting with the tide in a haphazard sort of way that will surely not enhance one's chances of attaining the results desired.

First Learn to Grow Stock.

The grower who can point with pardonable pride to his own success has first of all mastered the art of growing good stock. His own experience probably has taught him that with intelligent care and strict attention to every detail, he can grow a geranium that will easily sell at $1.50 to $2 per dozen, and will give better satisfaction to his customers, than the truck offered at half that price, that a first-class rose at a good price is sold more readily in the open market at any season of the year than the poor, measly thing offered for next to nothing.

Having learned by experience that first-class stock, regardless of the higher cost of production, pays well in the end, his next step is to increase his facilities and thereby increase his income; in other words, he is not content to rest, to let well enough alone, but like all progressive men of this progressive age, he believes in expansion, in a large market.

Up goes an additional range of houses, well planned, splendidly built, more modern in all their appointments. Nor does he find it profitable to hitch up at an ungodly hour in the morning, in order to reach town in time with his flowers, to make his rounds from store to store, to peddle his stock, as it were, at anything it may fetch. He must be at the helm himself, if his barge of trade is to steer clear of all dangerous obstructions. With increased and improved facilities, his local market, good enough in the days of yore, no longer satisfies him now. Neither does the "hitching up" modus operandi. He must find an outlet for his stock other than that of the olden times. Stock grown at Oshkosh or Kalamazoo is no longer intended for local consumption only. Chicago or Milwaukee, Detroit, Buffalo or Pittsburg, want this stock. To reach these places is but a simple matter now, for the man in touch with market conditions, the commission man, has evolved a system whereby flowers are marketed, like any other commodity, every day in the year at prices regulated by the inexorable law of supply and demand. Be it remembered, however, that the grower producing high grade stock is sure of his market under the most adverse conditions; that while cheap truck is cast aside, flowers of quality seldom, if ever, go to waste.

What is true of flowers holds equally true of plants of all sorts. The weak, spindly-looking apology for a geranium, the seedy-looking fern, the drawn, ill-shaped palm, are, as a matter of course, not marketable. The man forcing such stuff on the market, be his methods ever so ingenious, will soon find out that one cannot fool the people all the time.

Commission Man a Great Help.

And here I can hardly refrain from paying a tribute to the commission man, the man who is not infrequently put under the ban of suspicion, who is often ridiculed, who is even classified as one of the pests, such as red spider, scale, club worms, etc., which the grower has to fight continually in order to keep his head above the high-water mark. This, to say the least, is a great injustice to the men who have revolutionized old methods, who have evolved a business system out of chaos, who are to a great extent responsible for the present prosperous condition of our business. Has it ever occurred to the grower of a generation ago that while he was overloaded and his stock was going to waste, Mr. Smith, two or three hundred miles away, was refusing orders for want of stock, that while one suffered because of an oversupply, the other one was the loser on account of shortage? Has not the commission man eliminated these disadvantages to a great extent? How often does he resort to such means as the telegraph and the telephone in order to move stock? Alert, progressive and watchful, such are the qualities of the average commission man. But for him or his system, most of the growers would be still groping in the dark, growing a little of everything and nothing much or well in particular; but for the commission man, many a grower would be still peddling his stock for whatever it might bring, regardless of the cost of production; but for the commission man's system, I venture to say, many a grower, now enjoying the full measure of prosperity, would have never achieved his success.

Must Watch Both Ends.

It is one thing to be a good grower and it is quite another thing to be on the alert and to keep in touch with market conditions as they arise daily. The man who attempts the Jack of all trades methods is sure to become master of none. One end or the other, and not infrequently both, must suffer in consequence.

If one's place be large enough to warrant it, let him establish his own commission house, as several growers in Chicago and in New York did, but the two ends, that of the growing and that of the selling, must be kept apart; in other words, there must be two heads, one at each end, else success is impossible.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS.

Fuel and Fireman.

As the season for steady firing approaches, preparations should be made to have everything in order so that no part of the work which can be done now will be left out.

The coal supply should by this time be a settled question, so that no uncertainty during cold weather may come up, as we are far from certain how we may be treated by the powers that be unless we have a signed contract—and not even then.

A very important subject at this season is the selection of a night fireman. The day fireman we have always under our eye, and can in a measure control him, so that he cannot get far astray, but with the night man it is entirely different. We have to delegate our power to him for at least ten out of the twenty-four hours, and if he is incapable or faithless to his trust he can do more damage in these few hours than can be recovered in a season.

A nightman must above all things be sober, conscientious and truthful. He must also possess the requisite amount of knowledge of how and when to ventilate and apply heat in regulating the temperature and keeping it up to the point indicated, so that by a careful manipulation of valves and ventilators he may be able to keep a uniform temperature and a pure, fresh atmosphere.

He must also be enough of a mechanic to be able to make simple repairs, and have a good knowledge of the art of firing economically.

With such a man in charge we can depend on having our orders intelligently carried out, and can look for success to attend our efforts during the day.

Other Details.

All soil to be used for winter potting should now be stored and protected from rain, and all material required for mulching should be attended to and placed where it will be ready and handy when needed.

Boilers and piping should be put into good, serviceable condition and tested, so that when wanted they will be ready.

These and many other duties which can be done now at little cost and effort, but which if performed during the short cold days bring a lot of trouble in their wake, should be attended to while the good weather lasts.

RIBES.

the plant appeared to be healthy. Another branch then would become affected and wither, until the whole plant was dried up but left standing, the stem sound and the last to die. All varieties were affected alike. Now the plants are in the houses. Some twelve or fifteen plants have gone the same way and not one from stem-rot. A remedy or some light upon the subject will be greatly appreciated.

C. A. M.

I regret that I cannot give a remedy that will save for you the plants that show the disease you complain of. The disease is what is commonly called dry-rot or branch-rot. It differs from the common stem-rot in that it does not require moisture to become active, as does the other one. The same remedies cannot be employed to fight it, and, indeed, I cannot say positively that I know of any remedy for it. Its worst feature is that you cannot detect its presence until the plant begins to die, one branch at a time, and after a branch has died you are too late to save the rest of the plant. It attacks close to the stem and by the time the first branch is wilted it has spread through the whole plant in a greater or lesser degree. As a rule it does not spread like the common form of stem-rot, but a plant will die here and there and the plants around it remain perfectly healthy.

This form is not so destructive as the other, so we have not sought so diligently for a preventive as we have in the other case. When a plant shows the disease we pull it up and plant in another if we have some in pots, which you should have. We have never seen a second plant attacked when planted in the place where one had died. When cool weather sets in you will see less of it.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Watering.

Watering is a matter concerning which there probably is as much doubt as any operation connected with the cultivation of plants. Retailers of potted plants will bear witness that customers almost invariably press the question: "How often and how much water shall I use?"

This is not strange when it is considered that care of plants occupies but a small part of their time, but with one constantly at it and devoted to his business, it becomes second nature to quickly perceive a plant's needs in this direction. No effort is required, but to impart the knowledge to another is practically impossible. Unless one takes pride in the appearance of stock in his care and does some thinking for himself, no amount of advice will assist in making him more than an ordinary hand with the hose.

We can point out conditions likely to occur, thereby furnishing food for thought and when up against the real thing, the careful grower already has in his mind what to do.

It is not many years since the general custom at the first watering of a newly planted bench of carnations, was to soak the soil to the point of saturation. It took but little reasoning to see that this was detrimental to both plants and soil, to say nothing of its providing ideal conditions for an attack of stem-rot.

Knowing the make-up of your soil and the construction of bench, one can easily judge the natural capacity of a bench to hold moisture, but all parts do not dry out alike, notwithstanding our efforts to maintain an even density of soil when filling, so the safe plan is to examine at various points.

The best time to water is in the early forenoon of a bright day, but there are times when spots will be found that need touching up even late in the afternoon; but keep it off the foliage.

After several days of dark, stormy weather, during which the growth made must necessarily be somewhat soft, judicious use of the spray can be made to prevent flagging. You have probably noticed after a sudden shower during the night what an increase of bloom has taken place on outdoor plants in general. The same effect can be produced under glass, but in not so marked a degree.

Around the holidays, or at some time when an extra demand for bloom is known in advance, considerable advantage can be gained by skilful manipulation of the hose.

Discontinue watering under the benches or much in the paths at this time. The nights are growing cooler and it is not desirable to have the houses damp at night. Of course, you will keep the ventilators well up to allow free circulation of air at all times, thus contributing to sturdy growth.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Importance of Providing Compost.

There is nothing impressing me more at the present moment than the great carelessness which many florists display in regard to the supply of soil for next spring and summer's crops. So important is it, and so disastrous is neglect, that I feel there is no more important seasonable hint. I am aware there are many wise and industrious men who fully realize the importance of a good compost pile and procure it. It should be had at as reasonable a price as is possible, but if it takes a lot of money to procure it, you may invest knowing that it is the foundation of your business.

Many a florist, big and little, gets along fairly well in his own opinion by scraping up a load of Mother Earth here and there and adding a large quantity of animal manure. Producing fairly good plants and cut flowers, they believe the outlay of possibly a hundred dollars to be a useless extravagance. They are forced to pay a thousand dollars, perhaps thousands of dollars, every winter to keep their stock at the proper temperature. But the all-important element that feeds and sustains health and vigor in the plants receives only a slovenly and haphazard attention.

Various Views.

A young and successful grower, of Cleveland, O., remarked to me last spring, in reply to the question, "Have you good soil?" "Not particularly good, but you can make your soil." Don't you believe it. No chemical ingredients ever will restore the elements with which Nature blessed the virgin soil.

Another remark was from a young man, who since his debut in our locality has proved our best rose grower, has made money and been all-around successful. He called on the writer, and among other questions asked for a good, honest lawyer, then a safe bank. Since that the lawyer whose name was given has been indicted for grand larceny or graft. The bank failed for two millions. He did not ask us for advice on the most important item, "Where will I find good soil?" No, he started out in search of that, left it to no man's judgment, did not buy a little farm because it was cheap, or near a railroad station, but wandered through the county of Erie for three weeks until he had located the spot which was covered with the sod that he believed would grow prime roses. His judgment and patience have been rewarded by the great success that has followed his efforts.

What Large Growers Do.

On a visit to Salter Bros., of Rochester, N. Y., some years ago when Bobby Bard, now of Syracuse, was their foreman and rose grower, I remarked, from the excellent condition of their roses, that they must have good soil. One of the firm remarked, "It ought to be good; it cost $5 a yard." This price would scare many florists. Yet they get it all back, and good profit on the outlay.

The large growers of roses in the city of Wilkesbarre, Pa., go out in the country, buy a tract of land, haul by wagon the soil four or five miles to the cars, then a railroad journey of thirty miles, and another short haul to their houses. This may be an extreme case, but it illustrates how important is the question of good soil in the opinion of wise men.

W. J. Palmer, Lancaster, N. Y., has within a few years bought a 90-acre farm within teaming distance of his large plant, not to raise Jersey cattle, South Down sheep, or Berkshire hogs, but to supply him with soil for his roses and carnations.

Now Is the Time.

Why this is a seasonable reminder is because your roses and carnations are depend entirely on bringing soil to form the compost pile.

So I say to you, brethren and sons, don't spare expense in preparing a sufficient quantity of good soil. When spring comes, you will bless yourself for the foresight in being prepared. I do not attach so much importance to the texture of the soil as to its freshness. Soil that never has grown an artificial crop, only our natural grasses that grew, flourished and died to restore to Mother Earth the elements they borrowed, is what we should use.

Theory of Bacteria.

Nearly every writer on gardening recommends, for the great majority of plants, a fibrous loam. The fiber is the roots of the grasses. What is there in the fiber that is of so much benefit to the roots of the plants you are cultivating? No doubt the mechanical use of the fibrous roots is of benefit, as they would keep the soil porous and open, which is of undoubted benefit. But that is not all. On asking a learned professor of our city what there was so beneficial to plant life in decaying fibrous roots, he replied that possibly in the process of decay of the fibrous roots there are bacteria set free that are most beneficial to the feeding roots of living plants. The science of bacteria was unheard of forty years ago. Since that the knowledge of these minute creatures is the great weapon that medical science uses to combat all the known diseases. There is only one disease, divorce, that scientists have not discovered the bacillus of, and that may come. All bacall means, for all your pot-grown plants get the top three inches of a pasture. Pile it up in layers six inches in thickness, and for every six inches of sod spread three inches of fresh cow manure. If that is not to be had, then short stable manure will do. Reserve any addition of chemical manure till the soil is on the benches or the potting bench.

Build your pile of sod with perpendicular walls and a flat top. Decomposition of the sod or manure will not be rapid if dry. So a number of holes made by a crowbar will let a soaking of water penetrate the whole mass. If this pile of sod is prepared within a few weeks, you will be able, before a freeze-up comes, to chop it down and throw it into a long heap, which will not only thoroughly mix it, but render it fit to use in early spring.

How Big Growers Do.

Many large growers of roses and carnations avoid the labor of piling up their sod heaps. They select a piece of pasture and plough it in the fall, plough again in early spring, and when wanted for use cart it to the greenhouse door, and there add the manure. For extensive places this must be the least expensive method, but for places of moderate size, especially when pot-plants are largely grown, the compost plan is much better. When chopping down the sod pile before winter arrives, you should store in a dry shed, or under cover, sufficient soil to last you through the winter, and not be using the soil from an old chrysanthemum bed. This is old, worn out, second-hand stuff, and what it will grow will be of second rate quality.

Whether or not you can get the ideal sod, get the best you can, as long as it is fresh and not worn out. Stack it up in a business-like shape, with plenty of manure. Get it even if it does cost good money, and you will have attended to a most important part of your business, and one that will save you lots of future worry and vexation. Do it now!

all on the bench, or should be, and there is no time less well filled than from now until the first part of November. In the whole eye of the year there is no time when the work in the houses is done. It is only a matter of how well or how thoroughly it is done, but a little neglect in the fall is not so dangerous as in the spring. And for other reasons fall is the time to make your compost piles. Some are fortunate enough to have a farm surrounding them that will supply them with soil for many years. Others may have only a few acres, and the majority of city florists have their whole place covered with glass, and must teria are not injurious. Many of these minute pollywogs add to our pleasure and luxury. Without them we should not have the good, old ale or the ripe, old cheese, and many other things that please the epicurean palate. There would be no decay of vegetable or animal matter, so these microscopical creatures (seven millions to the cubic centimeter) are a blessing in disguise—very much in disguise.

Whether the professor's theory of the decaying fiber is right or wrong, we will get down to the practical question. By

A PENNSYLVANIA PLANT.

The accompanying illustrations are reproduced from photographs taken June 14 at the establishment of Frank B. Rine, at Lewisburg, Pa., and show what may be accomplished by a good grower in houses that embody few modern features. At the left in the general view of the establishment are shown the latest additions to the place, up-to-date in every particular; at the right are shown the older houses, from which some excellent stock is turned out in spite of the fact that the structures are neither so high nor so light as many growers think necessary, and as all think desirable. In one of the older houses there is a bench of Lawson carnations only three feet from the glass, from which good flowers were cut in September and from which a steady supply was had right through the season, 516 blooms being cut from a space 5x50 feet on June 15. One of the interior views shows a house containing three benches of Lawson that were in fine shape right up into the summer. This variety shows no signs of running out here.

The other interior view shows a bench of Lady Bountiful carnations 5x190, with a row of tomato plants on each side of the bench. The tomato plants were loaded with fruit by early June and at the time the photographs were taken the carnations were still giving first-class flowers. Mr. Rine says that he thinks the shade of the tomatoes helped the carnations, for they continued in full health after the weather became hot.

Mr. Rine started in business in 1882 and has built up a fine trade. He grows a full line of cut flowers, plants and vegetables.

SUMMER BUSINESS.

There is an ancient expression, "the good old summer time," and another about "the melancholy days, the saddest of the year." He was not a florist who coined these phrases. The perspiring days of summer are those in which the grower does his heaviest labor, and the ones in which his receipts are lightest. When nature is in "the sear and yellow leaf," the greenhouse man "sits up to take notice" that there is a demand for his products; his harvest season is at hand.

It is worth while noting, however, that the summer seasons steadily are becoming better. It is not possible to say that business continues good through the heated term, but there is, nevertheless, a noticeable increase in the volume of trade, possibly largely due to the fact that in the wholesale cut flower centers growers have been making something of an effort to provide summer flowers of attractive quality. Good Beauties are in demand in the summer, and those growers who have had crops the past season have made excellent money on them. Houses of summer roses, also, have proven profitable, and the tendency for better things in summer weather was sufficiently marked this year that Irvin Bertermann mentioned the fact in his excellent paper read at the S. A. F. convention.

DUTY ON GLASS.

At the florists' convention held at Dayton, O., President Kasting's address brought out matters which led to a discussion on the high cost of greenhouse glass, and that the tariff thereon had a marked effect in keeping up the very high cost.

How many millions of square feet of glass there are used by the florists of the United States, I am unable to say, but all men who have greenhouses or cold frame plants are greatly interested in the cost of this important commodity.

At the discussion which ensued at the time, it was stated that if there was to be anything done in the modification of the present tax on glass, some action must be taken, otherwise nothing would ever be accomplished.

The matter, after debate, was referred to a committee of which the writer is a member, and to give a correct status of the present rate on glass, application was made to the Commissioner of Commerce and Labor.

Prior to the Spanish war (so-called), the rate on glass used by the greenhouse men was as follows:

On all sizes not exceeding 10x15 inches the import duty was 1 cent per pound; on sizes above 10x15 inches and not exceeding 16x24 inches, 1¼ cents per pound; above 16x24 inches and not exceeding 24x30 inches, 1¾ cents per pound.

It will be noted that the tariff is not placed upon the square foot nor is it an ad valorem rate, the valuation being placed on the net weight of glass in the boxes, which is fifty feet or as near as may be, and glass will approximate fifty to eighty pounds net in a box, according to thickness. Such was the rate in existence in 1896.

In 1897 the tariff was changed and it is under this tariff that the glass now used in the United States is protected. The paragraph which governs that duty is as follows:

"Glass not exceeding 10x15 inches, 1¾ cents per pound; above that and not exceeding 16x24 inches, 1¾ cents per pound, and not exceeding 24x30 inches, 2¾ cents per pound."

Provided, that the duties shall be according to the actual weight of the glass. The reader will see at a glance the substantial increase in the cost of each box of glass which this protection gives over and above 1896 and previous. In 1896 the volume imported of the cylinder, crown and common window glass was $54,189,854.13 and for 1905 it was $17,933,028.50.

The question before the greenhouse men of the country is, whether it is worth while to make an effort to procure a less duty on glass, to bring before the proper authorities the sense that the time is ripe and should be carried into effect of modifying for the general good, the high rates of the present duties.

Of course this matter effects not only greenhouse people but every builder and sash-maker in the land.

It was suggested at the Dayton convention that the florists of the United Tomatoes and Lady Bountiful Carnations at F. B. Rine's.

States should make known their interest in the matter by direct statement. The committee to whom this matter was referred, would be glad to hear of the public expression, looking forward to a proper presentation of the matter in such shape that it will command the attention of the proper congressional committees. A FLORISTS' TRIBUTE.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of the wreath of laurel, cycas leaves and dark purple asters which was the offering of the Columbus Florists' Club, as a tribute to the memory of our late president at the unveiling of the McKinley memorial monument by Mrs. Nicholas Longworth. These ceremonies took place at Columbus, Friday, September 14. The committee from the club in charge of the matter was Messrs. Albert Knopf, Guy H. Woodrow and M. B. Faxon.

H. G. SELFRIDGE'S ORCHIDS.

It will surprise many of our plant lovers to hear that the entire collection of orchids from H. G. Selfridge's estate at Lake Geneva, Wis., will be loaned to Lincoln park, Chicago, as Mr. Selfridge,

After deciding to part with his orchids, Mr. Selfridge was thinking what would be best to do with such a collection. He did not care to sell them, as that would mean breaking up the collection. So, generous as he has always been, he decided to give the entire collection for the benefit of the public, and decided that Lincoln park would be the best place for them, where people can always visit and admire them. Mr. Selfridge made an offer to the park board, which was accepted. The plants were accepted as a loan, and they will be known as the Selfridge orchid collection.

The Selfridge collection contains ninety-eight genera, 954 varieties and about 3,500 plants, many of them rare and expensive. The collection is valued at $18,000. The queen of all is Cattleya Mrs. H. G. Selfridge, a seedling from Cattleya Warneri and Lælia purpurata. For this plant Mr. Selfridge paid $300. He now has two plants, and next year another can be divided from the mother plant. Next to this comes the $100 plants, such as Oncidium ornithorhynchum album, Vanda Sanderiana, etc. The vandas are reported to be extinct in their native country, the Philippines. Then comes a lot of Cattleya seedlings, all fine and rare. There are also three plants of Cattleya Marie Morgan, the cypripediums, among them the fine yellow type, Cypripedium Sanderæ. It would take too much time to describe them all. One must go to Lincoln park and see them in all their glory to appreciate them. When Vanda tricolor, Vanda suavis, or one of the varieties of stanhopea or Epidendrum radiatum are in bloom, the atmosphere for 100 feet in every direction is filled with the most delightful perfume.

Mr. Selfridge's absence will be a great loss to the Horticultural Society of Chicago, and to all those who are interested in plants. We need more such enthusiastic, nature-loving men. He always was ready to lift horticulture to its highest standards, and especially when orchids were concerned. There has not been a flower show in Chicago where Mr. Selfridge's orchids have not taken first prizes, and made the show more attractive. The largest crowd always was around his exhibits. Mr. Selfridge won the gold medal at the St. Louis exposition for the best collection of orchids.

STARTING LETTUCE SEED.

To secure plants for indoor planting the best place to sow after this date is in flats in a cool greenhouse. They still can be started in cold frames, but in the greenhouse they are better under control and when the temperature goes below the freezing point, which it is apt to do any time now, it is easier to put on a little heat in a house than to cover up the frames to insure against injury or check.

It will pay to take the trouble to run the soil used for filling the flats through a sieve, as the plants will lift a good deal easier and with less danger of breaking the roots, than if the soil is rough and lumpy. The rough material can be used in the bottom to act as drainage, but there should be at least two inches of sifted soil on top, so as to allow plenty of root-room for the little plants, without danger of the roots running down into the rough material at the bottom of the box. Before the seeds are sown, the surface of the soil should be made perfectly smooth and level.

The seeds should be scattered evenly over the surface of the soil, but not too thickly. If sown too thickly the little plants are in danger of becoming drawn and weak before they are large enough to be handled, a condition which it is always desirable to guard against. It is better to sow an extra box or two, rather than try to procure a greater number of plants from a few flats, as it gives the plants a chance to develop nicely and remain stocky. They then can be lifted and handled with a good deal more satisfaction, and with more certainty of success.

Bringing Horticulture into the Heart of the City.

The soil used should be in an intermediate condition in regard to moisture. If too dry it is hard to damp it evenly, as the water will run through in patches and leave other patches quite dry. On the other hand, if soil is handled too wet it is apt to cake or harden on the surface, a condition which will considerably hinder the starting and coming up of the seeds.

The seeds should be covered lightly with fine, sifted soil and after the flats are set on the bench, they should receive a watering sufficient to dampen the whole of the soil. For this purpose a fine rose should be used on the watering-pot. If a heavy one is used the seeds may be displaced and run into bunches, and a heavy watering also will tend to harden the surface of the soil when it dries out.

If the flats are set in a bright house it will be advantageous to the starting of the seeds, if shading is provided from the direct rays of the sun, but after the little plants are well up the shading should be discontinued and full exposure allowed.

Subsequent waterings must be judiciously given. What is known as damping off, which is really a fungous disease, is often the result of careless watering. It is generally claimed that overwatering is alone responsible for this condition, but my experience proves that it is more often the result of extremes either way, and that it also often is caused by too much manure in the soil. For seed sowing we invariably use soil without any manure whatever.

The varieties to be grown will have to be regulated according to what will command the best market. Where Grand Rapids can be used it is by far the easiest variety to grow, but if a head lettuce best suits the requirements, Tennis Ball, Boston Market or its improved form, known as Glass House, will be found suitable kinds to grow.

W. S. CROYDON.

IN THE HEART OF THE TOWN.

When the S. A. F. visited Dayton last month there were many comments on the general use of plants and the great degree in which they enhanced the attractiveness of the city. While much of the credit is due to the efforts of John H. Patterson, still there are other enthusiasts who have done their share and one whose work particularly impressed the florists was C. T. Freeman, proprietor of the Atlas hotel. Mr. Freeman's planting along the Ludlow street side of his house not only increased the habitableness of his place to a very appreciable extent, but it brought horticulture right into the heart of the city, where thousands pass each day and can not fail to absorb some enthusiasm for, or at least appreciation of the beauties of horticulture.

While the accompanying illustration, from a photograph taken at the suggestion of Arthur Cowee, Berlin, N. Y., who was one of Mr. Freeman's guests during convention week, shows the extent and something of the character of the Atlas planting, it does not give an adequate conception of the general effect, which was much enhanced by the character of the surroundings. The green in contrast to the asphalt paving and the red brick wall was a relief to the eye to a degree which is not even suggested in the picture. Still it will serve to give many a florist an idea with which he can go to his local hotel-keeper with a suggestion which, if adopted, will redound to the everlasting credit of the florist, the hotel and the town.

DESIRABLE HARDY PERENNIALS.

Coreopsis Grandiflora.

This plant is of special value to florists, owing to its ease of propagation, free-blooming qualities and usefulness for cutting. It is usually treated as a biennial, seed being sown in May or June and pricked out into nursery rows when large enough to handle. As it is liable to damp off in winter unless the land where it is planted is well trained, it is safer to carry the plants over in a coldframe, placing them there just before the ground freezes. If faded flowers are cut away, C. grandiflora will flower all summer. In addition to being valuable in the border, it makes a very desirable pot plant, and if Easter does not come too early it may be had in bloom then, but for Memorial day trade it is particularly useful. Pot up some of the strongest clumps in early October, keep in a cool pit until January, then give them a temperature of 50 to 52 degrees at night. When the flower spikes are showing, feed freely and don't forget to use a stake in each pot to keep the stalk straight. Pots from eight to ten inches in diameter we find are the best sizes to use, and a batch of this size plants on Memorial day has come to be a necessity. If you have never grown any try a few for next season.

Clematis Recta.

The several varieties of shrubby clematis are all well worthy of culture in the hardy border, growing from two to four feet high and forming dense clumps, with fresh, light green foliage. They are attractive even when out of flower. They increase rapidly by root division, and flower best when established a couple of seasons. C. recta, which flowers late in June or early in July, is excellent for design work, its large, white, feathery clusters being excellent for this purpose. It also looks well arranged on long stems in vases.

C. integrifolia blooms early in August; flowers are large and deep blue in color. C. Davidiana carries tubular, bell-shaped flowers of a deep, lavender blue shade in August and September. C. heracleæfolia has flowers a little paler in color than C. Davidiana, but is of very similar habit.

Incarvillea Delavayi.

This comparatively new tuberous-rooted plant quickly jumped into the ranks of a favorite, and any one who has seen it growing and flowering cannot but admit that it is a gem. The large gloxinia-like flowers, which are of a bright rosy color, last remarkably well. The foliage also is handsome. Some growers seem to be able to winter this plant in the open with a protection of leaves. Some of our plants have come through protected in this way, while others have died. We think the safest plan is to lift and store the roots early in November in boxes of sand or light, sandy loam, and keep in a cool cellar until April.

Hypericum Moserianum.

This is a splendid herbaceous plant, of a free and graceful habit. It is not considered reliably hardy in the east, north of Philadelphia, but plants have stood out during the last ten winters in New Hampshire and were practically unhurt. It is a most persistent bloomer, the slender, much branched stems being weighted down with their large, golden yellow flowers, which are two and one-half to three inches in diameter. The numerous prominent yellow stamens and crimson anthers make the flowers very attractive.

Physostegia Virginiana.

Physostegia Virginiana, commonly called the false dragon head, and Texas heath, is one of the most beautiful and useful of perennials blooming at mid-summer. A vase of this hardy plant, cut with long stems, is very telling, and few there are who fail to notice it when staged in collections of perennials at the summer shows. The flowers are of a pleasing, soft pink color. P. Virginiana alba has pure white flowers, and P. speciosa delicate pink ones. A few growers have made a specialty of these for market purposes, and find that they pay well, for many retail florists in the cities are pleased to get hold of a flower which is a good keeper and is a little out of the beaten track of florists' staples. Propagation of either seed or division is easy. Plants can be bought at low rates, and a few dozen plants will be found valuable on either commercial or private estates.

Cimicifuga.

Cimicifuga, better known as snake root, is desirable for the hardy garden. Probably the best known variety is the pretty native species, C. racemosa. This grows sometimes to a height of six feet, the flower portion alone being frequently two feet or more in length. The flowers are pure white, and are produced in July and August. C. simplex, still sometimes sold as Aetæa Japonica, is a valuable late flowering variety which does not open until September and lasts well into October. Spikes can be cut two and one-half feet long of this variety. Flowers are pure white and last well in water. C. Dahurica, with creamy white flowers, and C. Japonica, pure white, are also desirable varieties. These are all perfectly hardy, and increase very satisfactorily from year to year.

Boltonias.

These are among the finest of all our late summer and fall flowering perennials. For mass effects in beds they are excellent. As cut flowers they are useful, lasting, as they do, remarkably well. They are well adapted for filling large vases, and should be cut with long stems. We find them useful in design work at a time when suitable material is none too abundant. The pure white B. asteroides and the pink B. latisquama are the best varieties to grow. As boltonias attain a height of four to six feet, they need staking to prevent the stems being bent or broken. This should be done before August 1. They increase freely from root division, are perfectly hardy and should be on every florist's place.

C. W.

ENGLISH HOLLY.

Ilex Aquifolium, commonly known as English holly, is one of our popular Christmas plants. The leaves are more prickly than the American species, Ilex opaca, and the fruit is more freely produced and more attractive. The plants are usually seen in tubs and most of them are imported. When growing wild, Ilex Aquifolium forms a tree sometimes forty feet high, with short, spreading branches, and forming a pyramidal head. Aquifolium can be grown further north than almost any variety. In England it is a favorite evergreen, and is used in hedges extensively, although a slow grower for this purpose. It can be pruned and trained readily into any desired shape. Most hollies are dicocious, and this important species is no exception; it is necessary to grow a few staminate plants among the pistillate to secure a good crop of fruit. One of the chief values of the hollies is in their showy, highly colored berries, so this matter of getting good fertilization is important. The pistillate plants should always predominate. The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of a plant imported for Christmas sale by a Boston retailer.

The English Holly.

HILL'S NEW HYDRANGEA.

The REVIEW has received from the E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., a box of fine heads of bloom of Hydrangea arborescens grandiflora alba, recently illustrated in these columns. The flower heads are big and pure white. Of this novelty Mr. Hill says:

"We think this hardy American shrub is the finest addition to this class of plants found in many a year. The blooms are of largest size, of pure snow-white color, and the foliage is finely finished, lacking entirely the coarseness found in H. paniculata grandiflora. One of its most valuable characteristics is its coming into bloom just after the passing of all the early spring shrubs, while its long season of bloom, from early June through August, renders it doubly valuable, not only to the florist, but to every owner of a garden. It is perfectly hardy, standing 20 degrees below zero.

"The form of the panicle is much like that of Hydrangea Hortensia. The habit of the plant is excellent. We think it is bound to become the most widely grown and the most useful of all the hydrangeas, and the most valuable shrub found in the American garden, while it is more than probable that the florist will find it a most important addition to his class of plants, both indoors and out."

BOSTON.

The Market.

On Tuesday, September 18, the thermometers registered 92 degrees in the shade. Flowers are exceedingly plentiful and trade rather slow. Roses are coming of better size, Beauty and Wellesley being especially good. No special change in prices on these. Carnations are much more plentiful, selling at about the same prices, 50 cents to $2 per hundred. A few single violets appeared this week, but are small, of course. They bring 50 cents to 75 cents per hundred. Tuberoses sell at 35 cents to 50 cents per dozen stalks. Asters are deteriorating, prices varying from 25 cents to $1.50 per hundred. Easter lilies average $1.50 per dozen. Gladioli evidently are near the end. Quite a number of Cattleya labiata now are seen in the better stores. A few small chrysanthemums are coming in. No change in green stock.

Club Meeting.

The opening fall meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club attracted a large gathering on September 18, there being 130 present. Reports were heard from the picnic committee and the committee on landscape gardening classes, which will commence in October. Votes of thanks were passed to all donors of prizes for the picnic. The membership list received a substantial addition, no less than seventeen applications being accepted.

There were interesting vacation experiences from a number of members, including reminiscences of the late Dayton convention. F. E. Palmer's essay on "The Ideal Gardener and His Work," read at Dayton, gave rise to a most animated discussion on the present standing, needs and requirements of the private gardener. Speakers were P. Welch, W. H. Elliott, F. E. Palmer, R. Cameron, D. Finlayson and others.

Several queries from the question box were answered. There were interesting exhibits from Blue Hill Nurseries, the parks, Heustis, Craig, Mrs. E. M. Gill and others, and last, but not least, refreshments were served as usual, it being quite late before closing time came. All present voted the meeting one of the best the club has yet held.

Various Notes.

There was a second exhibit of productions from children's school gardens at Horticultural hall on September 15. The produce was good, visitors numerous and evidently much interested in children's gardens.

A. P. Meredith, of South Lancaster, met with a quite serious accident on September 7, an explosion of gas from the boiler scorching him badly. The loss of his mustache makes some temporary facial change. We are glad to report he is much better.

Mr. and Mrs. Duncan Finlayson returned on the Saxonia, September 13, from a two months' European trip.

Lilium Philippense is meeting with a good sale in Boston at present. This promises to become a popular market variety.

Kenneth Finlayson and E. O. Orpet officiated as judges at the New Bedford show on September 13, when there was a fine exhibition, especially of dahlias.

Light frosts, the first of the season, were experienced in this section on September 16 and 17, but we have not heard of any particular damage being done. Weather remains abnormally dry.

Welch Bros. are handling quantities of superb lily of the valley, grown by Carl Jurgens, Newport, R. I.

Waban Conservatories are sending in extra fine Wellesley roses for the season. We predict much popularity for this variety during the coming winter.

William Sim started to pick Princess of Wales violets on September 15. His stock is this season finer than ever.

John Riley starts this week for a vacation in New York and Philadelphia.

Charles Boyle and W. Gorde have left their positions at Galvin's Back Bay store. They may start in business at Hoffman's old store on Boylston. They are two bright young men and should do well.

William Nicholson sailed for home on September 18. He is greatly improved in health by his three months' stay in Europe.

John Pritchett, manager at W. H. Elliott's establishment, at Madbury, N. H., has been in town for a week.

George A. Sutherland and wife have returned from their annual vacation in Maine, carrying a nice coat of tan.

Houghton & Clark have been making extensive repairs and improvements in their Boylston street store and it is now exceedingly attractive.

Welch Bros.' new place of business will be ready for occupancy early next week.

Canna The Express at Nathan Smith & Son's, Adrian, Mich.

Samuel Neil, of Dorchester, is making improvements, including rebuilding his Washington street conservatory.

E. E. Lovan, of Brookline, had the first violets of the season at the Park street market. They sold at 75 cents per hundred.

W. N. CRAIG.

LINCOLN, NEB.

The exhibition of the Nebraska State Horticultural Society at the state fair was one of the most successful the society has ever held. The fruit display was grand in quality and great in quantity. Grapes were particularly good, some thirty-five varieties of seedlings being shown, a number of them of superb quality. The society distributed fifty barrels of apples and several hundred baskets of grapes to the multitude on fruit day.

The space in the floral section was filled to the utmost capacity with good collections of clean, healthy well-grown stock and the competition was close. Following is a list of the awards:

Floral design, C. H. Green, Fremont, first; S. E. Greer, Lincoln, second; Brewster & Williams, Grand Island, third; Dole Floral Co., Beatrice, fourth.

Floral wreath, Brewster & Williams first, C. H. Green second, Dole Floral Co. third.

Bouquet, S. E. Greer first, Dole Floral Co. second, Brewster & Williams third.

Basket cut flowers, Brewster & Williams first, C. H. Green second, S. E. Greer third.

Collection cut roses, C. H. Green first, S. E. Greer second, Dole Floral Co. third.

Cut carnations, Brewster & Williams first, S. E. Greer second, Dole Floral Co. third.

Collection cut flowers, S. E. Greer first, C. H. Green second, Dole Floral Co. third.

Collection greenhouse plants, C. H. Green first, Brewster & Williams second, Dole Floral Co. third, S. E. Greer fourth.

Collection of palms, C. H. Green first, Brewster & Williams second, Dole Floral Co. third, S. E. Greer fourth.

Five palms, C. H. Green first, Dole Floral Co. second, Brewster & Williams, third, S. E. Greer fourth.

Collection of ferns, C. H. Green first, Brewster & Williams second, Dole Floral Co. third, S. E. Greer fourth.

Five variegated foliage plants, C. H. Green first, S. E. Greer second.

Display of new and rare plants, Dole Floral Co. first, C. H. Green second, Brewster & Williams third.

Collection Rex begonias, Brewster & Williams first, S. E. Greer second, Dole Floral Co. third.

Collection flowering begonias, Dole Floral Co. first, Brewster & Williams second, C. H. Green third.

Collection roses in pots, C. H. Green first, S. E. Greer second.

Carnations in pots, S. E. Greer first, Dole Floral Co. second.

Display tuberoses, C. H. Green first, Dole Floral Co. second.

Pair hanging baskets, C. H. Green first, S. E. Greer second, Dole Floral Co. third.

Bed of geraniums planted on the grounds, S. E. Greer first.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

The annual fall show of the New Bedford Horticultural Society, held September 13 to 15, was much the finest ever held in the Whale city. The schedule comprised nearly 200 classes, of which seventy were for dahlias. These were never before shown here in such profusion or of such splendid quality. In the professional classes, Mrs. H. A. Jahn was the largest individual exhibitor and captured three silver cups, including one for twenty-five named varieties, fifty cactus, and was also first for forty blooms arranged for effect, and captured many other prizes.

W. O. Hathaway won two silver cups, W. F. Turner one and Geo. H. Walker one in the pea classes. In the amateur classes, E. H. Wefee captured two cups, M. McCarthy one and J. C. Forbes one. Other large exhibitors and prize winners were A. B. Wordell, G. B. Fuller, F. L. Tinkham, Emanuel C. Sullavon, James Robertson and A. J. Fish. J. C. Forbes won a silver medal for the best seedling never before exhibited.

Among the exhibits calling for special notice was a fine group of foliage plants from James Garthly, gardener to H. H. Rogers. Samuel S. Peckham captured second prize with a nice arrangement. For a group of flowering and foliage plants, William Keith was first. This exhibitor had a banana in fruit which was an object of much interest. James Garthly won a bronze medal for display of fancy foliage plants, and R. H. Woodhouse a cultural certificate for a splendid lot of ferns and palms. James Garthly also secured a silver medal for crested tuberous begonias.

The display of dahlias was one of the finest ever seen in Massachusetts, and the interest taken in them by the visiting public shows that they are very popular in New Bedford.

OBITUARY.

Michael King.

Following an illness of several months' duration, Michael King, of Louisville, Ky., died at his home, 2428 Slevin street, of the infirmities of age, Saturday, September 8. He was 71 years old.

Mr. King was one of the best known florists in Louisville. He was the father of John King, who for several years conducted the Commercial College at Fifth and Market streets. He was president of the St. Vincent de Paul Society of St. Cecilia's church, and was well known in Catholic circles. He is survived by a son, Patrick King, and a daughter, Miss Mary King.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY

Baur & Smith, Indianapolis, Ind., register Carnation Pocahontas, a cross between a light red seedling and Gov. Roosevelt; strong, upright grower, free flowering and produces flowers of large size, with good calyx and a long, strong stem; color a bright shade of crimson.

ALBERT M. HERR, Sec'y.

THE CONVENTION DATE.

The spell of the oratory of Robert Craig and Gurney Hill must have spread its subtle influence over the S. A. F. in convention on that hot Thursday evening in August when it was voted that "if" the S. A. F. holds a national flower show, the convention should be combined with it, in November. Not a dissenting voice was heard when this resolution was up for passage. But no sooner had the members reached their homes than they began to experience a change of heart. At the meetings of florists' clubs held since the convention, the proposed change of date has been one of the interesting subjects for discussion, and whenever it has been brought up, opinion has been developed in opposition to the proposed change to November. This has occurred at New York, Detroit, Pittsburgh and other cities.

At the September meeting of the New York Florists' Club, there were present a number who had voted for the change to November. When John Birnie offered a resolution stating that it is the sense of the New York club that August is the most favorable month for the convention, it was unanimously adopted. There were present two directors of the S. A. F.

The matter of the change of date is up to the executive board. The "if" in the resolution seems to be one of increasing magnitude.

TROUBLE WITH ASTERS.

I am sending you a piece of aster root covered with small, translucent green insects. They attack the asters at the roots, suck the sap and soon kill them. What is it and what the remedy? The asters are planted in a bed with peonies and hardy phlox. Asters a few feet away are clean.

J. K.

When the minute insects reached us they were black in color. No doubt they were aphides of some kind. There is nothing to be done this year. You must submit to what loss it is, and profit by the lesson taught. To plant asters among such strong-rooting plants as peonies and perennial phlox is certainly poor judgment. The aphid which attacked the roots of your asters may be a species peculiar to the phlox or peony, but not injurious to them. The fact that the asters a little way removed from these plants were free from the aphid would indicate that. But whether that is or is not so, don't attempt to grow asters among other plants. Give them an open aspect on a deep, fresh, heavy loam with plenty of barnyard manure plowed in.

I remember some thirty years ago, when verbenas were far more popular than they are today, that we had a large circular bed planted with a scarlet ver-bena. They grew and flowered finely, and suited the situation so well we repeated it again the following year and they were much less satisfactory. We did the same a third year, when many of the plants died, and all were sickly. On examining the plants we found the roots infested with a small blue aphid. Perhaps there is no analogy between this experience and your asters. Few flowering plants, culinary vegetables or cereals thrive with successive crops of one kind on the same ground. One exception to this, I know, is onions, which, if annually treated to manure, will grow for ten years on the same spot and produce great crops. To rotate your crops is a good rule. The philosophy of this is simple: A certain plant takes from the soil some element that best suits it, and if repeated three or four years, the element is exhausted, the plant is feeble and already a prey to disease or parasites. All parasites are not injurious, and that reminds me of the witty observation of the immortal David Harum, who says: "A certain amount of fleas is good for a dog, because it keeps him from broodin' on bein' a dog."

THE READERS' CORNER.

Rose Lady Gay.

Quite a little has been said lately of the new rose, Lady Gay. I have one three years old, planted in a border. It is on a trellis eight feet long and seven feet wide and completely covers it. It made sixteen stout canes from ten to fourteen feet long, besides numerous side shoots from three to four feet. I wonder if the Dorothy Perkins rose can come up to this.

White Ants.

In the last REVIEW G. C. asks for information about white ants. They are a pest if they become established. I infer from the description that the chrysanthemums are planted in beds or benches with wood bottom or sides. The white ants seldom work elsewhere than in proximity to decaying vegetable matter and in a greenhouse this is usually the bench, posts, wall or board walk. I have never found more than isolated individuals in the main body of soil on a bench. Put crude or carbon oil on all the wood, sides and faces of the bench; let it run down the supports. It penetrates the pores of the wood and is sure death to the ants. If the bench has a wood bottom, paint it with the oil; if it penetrates sufficiently, good-bye ants.

CANNAS NOT SEEDING.

Why can I not obtain seeds of some of my cannas? The pods are all bare.

T. T.

On receipt of this query I visited several places where cannas are extensively planted, our public parks, etc. I found that cannas in our locality were bearing seeds as profusely as other seasons. We have had an extraordinarily fine, warm and dry summer, but we know that in many localities they have an extremely wet summer, and it is possible that frequent heavy rains may be the cause of your getting little seed.

ILLINOIS STATE FAIR.

J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, Ill., president of the Illinois State Florists' Association, writes as follows:

"Enclosed find a copy of a letter sent out to the florists of the state by a committee of the state association. We are trying to get all florists interested in this work in order to make a good showing at the state fair and thereby get a standing before the people, and especially those of influence with our legislature, in order to help us to get an appropriation for the interest of floriculture in the near future. Any publicity you may give this work through your valuable paper, I am sure will be of great benefit to our trade, and much appreciated by the society. You might also state in your next issue that there will be a meeting of the executive committee of the society held in the Dome building in the fair-grounds on Thursday, October 4, at 2 p. m., which all florists are invited to attend.

"The committee whose names are signed to the enclosed circular will be in attendance during the entire week of the fair, and any stock sent for exhibition will be staged and cared for by them. Parties who wish to send for exhibition only, especially cut flowers, should write the undersigned as to when the stock will arrive and what will be sent, so arrangements can be made for vases for same. Any other information you may want I will cheerfully give."

The circular letter is as follows:

Members of the Illinois State Florists' Association and all florists throughout the state; your interests are at stake.

It devolves upon us to make a creditable floral display at the coming state fair. The society has been called upon to assist in promoting floricultural exhibits. A committee has taken up the work with the superintendent of this department at the fair, and we now call on each and every florist throughout this great state to assist in this good work.

Remember, it is to all our interests to advance floriculture, and we know of no better way to interest the public than by liberal displays. If you have nothing to enter for competition, send for exhibition. Anything to help this movement along. Remember, this will be a starter on the road in the right direction.

Also be sure and come yourself and spend at least one day. This committee will be pleased to meet you there.

The Great Central Market.

The market has had its ups and downs during the last week. The cold weather shut off production and greatly stimulated demand, while it lasted, but it was only for a day or two, and this week opened with a return of the unseasonably high temperatures and more or less congestion in many of the wholesale houses.

The item in strongest demand is American Beauty roses, for which orders are coming from distant parts of the country. A large part of the crop is with long stems, and short and medium lengths are hard to supply. The quality is good throughout.

The Kaiserin crops are not as heavy as a few weeks ago, but Bride is slowly improving, and sufficient for most needs. Bridesmaid is showing better color, as well as length of stem, but those growers who are only beginning to cut on the first crop have only small stock to offer. Richmond is abundant, but not many Liberty are seen. Chatenay is both plentiful and good. Asters have been coming in a deluge for the last few days, but are near the end. Nearly all the receipts are white, and it is difficult to fill orders for asters in colors. Some of the stock is still of good quality, but much of it is well sold at 10 cents a bunch. Carnations are abundant, and slowly lengthening in stem. Some fine Enchantress are seen. There is complaint as to the shipping quality of carnations, but it could hardly be otherwise. With the hot weather there is none of that crispness necessary where stock is to travel long distances.

The receipts of chrysanthemums show no increase. They are to be had, but usually only on advance orders. The best Monrovia bring $4 per dozen.

Easter lilies are abundant. Gladioli are still received in quantity, but are of poor quality and little can be done with the average stock. Orders for fair displays and store openings have, however, made a market for quantities at fair prices. Valley is abundant and selling well. Dahlias are abundant. Sylvia is about the best seller. Most of the outdoor flowers have ceased to give the wholesalers trouble.

The demand for green goods is increasing, and the approach of autumn openings has brought many inquiries for prices on large orders for delivery in the next two or three weeks.

with Brant & Noe, has just concluded the purchase of the old established greenhouses of Jacob Shartz, Salem, Va. This plant was established by Mr. Shartz some twenty years ago, on a small scale, which by industry and skill he has built up until it is now one of the largest in the state. Mr. Curran, who takes possession at once, will be ably assisted by his son-in-law, J. E. Simpson, a grower of no small ability.

High Ridge Gets Cheaper Water.

The growers at High Ridge are greatly pleased at the action of the City of Chicago in taking possession, September 13, of the plant of the Rogers Park Water Co. The growers are interested that the quality of the water is improved, for all make more or less personal use of it, but of no small importance is the fact that the old rate was 25 cents per 1,000 gallons and the city's rate is 10 cents. It will make quite a saving in water bills. As there promises to be a fight over the city's manner of taking over the water plant, the growers doubtless will withhold payment until the controversy is settled.

Various Notes.

A. L. Vaughan, of Vaughan & Sperry, started Monday afternoon for a fortnight's trip through the east, his first stop being the violet country.

Scheiden & Schoos opened their wholesale store in the Flower Growers' Market Monday morning. E. Francis is manager and reports business quite satisfactory for a start. Their principal stock is carnations.

C. M. Dickinson, manager of E. H. Hunt's, owns a five-acre island in the Georgian bay district of Canada. It is not giving him as much trouble as Uncle Sam has had with his island possessions, but he is nevertheless willing to part with it.

Albert Amling, at Maywood, is having trouble with cutworms in his asparagus house.

Just a quorum was present at the club meeting last Thursday evening. The business consisted of the auditing of bills. W. K. Wood occupied the chair, L. H. Winterson, secretary, being the only officer present.

A. T. Pyfer has been appointed manager of the Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, to succeed the late James Harts-horne. Mr. Pyfer has been connected with the concern for some time.

E. F. Winterson Co. is building a large dust-proof display case for baskets and other easily damaged supplies.

J. B. Deamud has returned from his eastern trip. He spent a few days on his farm at Cairo, Mich.

Weiland & Risch are already cutting heavily of Killarney rose.

L. Coatsworth returned Monday from his trip to Canada.

The Benthey-Coatsworth Co. is beginning to cut new rose stock in quantity. They grow but four varieties, Bride and Maid, Killarney and Richmond.

Ed. Enders and John Enders lost their father Wednesday, September 12. He was 71 years of age.

August Poehlmann says that their increase in glass area this season was approximately forty per cent, but that he expects the gross sales as compared with last season to increase to a greater extent, as the stock is in much better condition at this date than it was at the same time a year ago.

E. E. Pieser, of Kennicott Bros. Co., returned last Friday from a three weeks' trip east, following the Dayton convention. Part of his time was spent in Canada.

H. F. Halle is contemplating opening a branch store on the north side. He owns the building occupied on West Madison street and holds the land under a ninety-nine years' lease.

O. P. Bassett, of Bassett & Washburn, says he is taking the fullest advantage of the fine autumn weather in his effort to wear out his automobile. He avers that when this machine is ready for the scrap heap he is going to quit automobiling—but no one believes he means it.

Alvah Sawyer, son of A. A. Sawyer, the Austin aster grower, on Tuesday returned to the University of Wisconsin.

H. N. Bruns states that he will force fewer Dutch bulbs this season, and devote more space to valley.

Kolman Bros., tobacconists, will branch out in the north store of the addition to the Fisher building as soon as it is completed. One of their new departments will be devoted to cut flowers.

Peter Reinberg's store is baseball headquarters, for Leonard Kill is what they call a "fan." Captain Chance, of the champion Chicago team, is one of his most intimate friends, and three-fingered Brown, whose real name is Mordecai, is his chum. Last Sunday Brown had Mr. Kill and A. C. Spencer out for a dinner before the last game Chicago played at home this season.

themums ready. They are among the growers who have Monrovia down fine, and October Frost is a new white mum, which is earlier than any other white heretofore grown for this market. There promises to be a big call for cuttings of it for next season.

Miss Nell M. Sisler is again on duty at E. H. Hunt's, after a vacation occasioned by illness.

C. W. McKellar says there is quite a little doing in wild smilax. The express is $1.60 per case from Alabama and the companies are reported as not satisfied with that.

M. Rocklin has returned from Kalamazoo, the firm of Fisher & Rocklin having dissolved.

J. A. Budlong is doing a good business with Beauties, having a nice crop on.

The George Witthold Co. found telephone tolls mounting up and has replaced the company's instruments with an interior telephone system of its own, attached to two city trunk lines. The telephone company does not like to have subscribers attach private instruments to its wires, thereby cutting off rentals, but is restrained by an injunction from interfering with the service in such cases.

In the alterations made necessary by the big addition to the Auditorium Annex, P. J. Hauswirth has been taken care of by the allotment of a fine store in the south end of the new building.

John Degnan has returned to the city after his summer rambles.

The A. L. Randall Co. is busy receiving and unpacking the importation of supplies arriving daily from Europe.

George Reinberg, Wietor Bros. and Peter Reinberg all report the demand for field-grown carnation plants as on the increase. It is now mostly small orders to fill vacant spots on the benches.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Market conditions remain much the same as a week ago. First-class stock continues to clean up nicely. There is too much stock of second and third grades in the market, roses, carnations and asters, which bring hardly anything, as they are mostly bought up in 1,000 lots. Trade is not yet as active as it should be among the retailers. The first week in October, which is home-coming week, should bring an extra amount of business in our line.

Monday the commission houses were doing a brisk business, with good stock rather limited. Asters, which were cheap and plentiful all last week, became suddenly scarce and every one wanted them.

Carnations have longer stems. Enchantress is the best, though Lawson is of improved color, but still short. Whites are nearly all field-grown.

Tuberose stalks are not so plentiful as a week ago. Only a few chrysanthemums are coming in, but these will soon be crowding the market. Some fine dahlias are seen, but meet with slow demand and bring little over $1 per hundred. Greens are in full supply.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club held its regular monthly meeting last week Thursday. There were thirty present, including a number of visitors.

There were eight applications for membership, but one was withdrawn. The seven elected were: Frank Venne-mann, Chas. Fulgraf, Fred M. Alves, Emil Denker, O. H. Haettemann and G. H. Pring. All are young men and should make valuable members.

An amendment to the by-laws was offered. This must lie over two meetings before action can be taken. President Ammann then announced that the installation of officers would take place, and appointed Frank J. Fillmore and John Steidle to escort President-elect H. C. Irish to his chair to be installed. With appropriate remarks the new president took his chair. The same ceremonies were used with Vice-President Connon, Secretary Beneke, Treasurer Bentzen and Trustee Smith. The outgoing officers were given a vote of thanks for the good and efficient work done by them the past year.

Emil Schray and E. W. Guy were given until next meeting on their discussions. With these Fred C. Weber will lead a discussion on "The Best and Most Attractive Way of Conducting a Retail Store." George B. Windler will also lead a discussion on "Growing Pot Chrysanthemums for Exhibition." A discussion followed on "Flower Shows," by President Irish, J. F. Ammann, F. J. Fillmore and others, all favoring holding an exhibition of some kind this fall. A suitably located hall is the greatest need.

The next meeting will be held Thursday, October 11, at 2 o'clock.

Siegel & Burk have parted company. John Burk will run the stand at Sixth and Locust streets and Axel. Siegel will continue at Sixth and Washington streets.

Bourdet & Roehr, landscape gardeners, at 1732 South Vandeventer place, have dissolved partnership. Jules Bourdet will continue the business.

J. H. Weber & Sons, Nursery, Mo., are sending in a fine lot of Killarney roses. Their Richmond and Chatenay are also coming on finely.

C. A. Kuehn received the first yellow chrysanthemums in this market Saturday, from C. A. Canfield, of Springfield, Ill.

Messrs. Steidle, Jablonsky and Dunford, at Clayton, are in great shape for an extra large cut this season of roses, carnations and violets.

C. C. Sanders, J. W. Schuette & Co. and H. J. Weber & Sons, the nurserymen, have heavy orders for fall delivery for all kinds of nursery stock. C. De Weaver and Emil Roetenhoefer are also busy in this line of work.

Henry Felter, on Lexington avenue, will be in line this fall with a fine lot of pot chrysanthemums.

Charlie Schoenelle had the decoration for the opening of the Model Store last week. The arrangements were attractive and great crowds visited the place.

Beyer Bros. had the Famous opening decorations and again did themselves proud, with fine decorative work.

James W. North, now of Lexington, Ky., was a visitor last week. He formerly was connected with the late North Floral Co. and now is with D. B. Honaker, at Lexington. He says they will open one of the finest retail stores in the west next week, and that their 100,000 feet of glass will back them up nicely.

Our Kirkwood florists, Wm. Winter, F. W. Ude, Jr., and Frank Vennemann, who attended the club meeting Thursday, reported everything in fine shape for a big season's crop.

Our wholesalers, Messrs. Kuehn, Berning, Ellis and Angermueller, all report that they are ready to handle big shipments this season. Shipping trade has opened up nicely with them, and the local trade, too, has picked up greatly the last week. J. J. B.

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO.

Club Meeting.

The September meeting of the Springfield Florists' Club was held on Monday evening in the spacious and well appointed offices of The Good & Reese Co. The membership committee reported having added fifteen names to the original twenty-two, with a possible five yet to be secured, and perhaps also several stockholders of the various incorporated companies who are not active in the business but eligible to membership. This meeting partook somewhat of the nature of an exploitation of Springfield's manufactured products pertaining to the florists' business, and the general sentiment was to the effect that in several such lines the city should be shipping out such goods instead of bringing them in from other sources.

The Springfield Clay Mfg. Co., which is said to be progressing under new mangement, exhibited some excellent specimens of flower pots for which great porosity is claimed and consequent favorable growth of plants.

Various Notes.

P. J. Agnew, who has long been doing business here, partly in local retail trade and to some extent as a grower for other concerns, is reported as having sold his establishment to James Campbell, who has been in the employ of The Good & Reese Co.

C. M. Niuffer has installed a seventy horse-power boiler of the Kroeschell type, and R. H. Murphey's Sons, of Urbana, a forty horse-power internally fired boiler.

The Home City Planing Mill Co., a new concern with modern equipment, supplied the necessary mill stuff for the new houses erected by the Leedle Floral Co. This was the first contract undertaken by this company for florists' work, although they had previously gotten out a couple of houses for vegetable gardeners.

During the season, three new houses each 20x150 feet have been completed by John A. Doyle, the rose grower.

The Good & Reese Co. will place on the market this fall a new rose named Helen Good in honor of the young daughter of John M. Good. This originated at The United States Nursery Co.'s place at Rich, Miss., as a sport from Maman Cochet, being considerably lighter in color, somewhat resembling Golden Gate.

Thomas McBeth, one of Springfield's veteran florists, exhibited to the club a fine specimen of Hydrangea arborescens sterilis, a sport from the wild Hydrangea arborea, which he has been propagating for a friend to whom it has been known as growing wild at several places in this vicinity for fifteen or more years. One magnificent plant is known to have attained a height of eight feet and a diameter of ten feet. The bloom is perfectly white, changing at maturity to a green almost identical with the foliage in color. It is entirely hardy and flowers from the last of June until about the middle of August, and could readily be forced for December and Easter blooms. GE DALE.

BUFFALO.

The Market.

Splendid gladioli are coming in from Rochester, and roses are slowly improving. There is plenty of material to supply the summer trade, which has been the best we can remember in many years. The aster is king just as present, and in good demand. Lucky will the man be who has them in two weeks hence.

The Picnic.

Of course the chief event last fortnight was the annual picnic at Fort Erie grove. As the ferry runs at intervals, there was no set hour for reaching the grounds, and the folks arrived on the installment plan.

The principal event on the program was the ball game, west side versus east side. At the finish, the score was nine to three in favor of the west side. The battery for the winner was Robert Scott, pitcher, and David Scott (semi-professional), catcher; for the east, John Weise, pitcher and Boettger, catcher. If the fielders of the east had backed up the good work of the battery, the result would have been different. It was pleasant to see such veterans as S. A. Anderson doing excellent work on first base. W. F. Kasting made a good umpire, that is, for the east side. There were threats to get a stone boat and haul him to the lake, but on repeated promises to be fair, he was let off. Prof. Cowell made a phenomenal catch in center field, and Mr. Sage, of Red Rock, Va., happened to get his 300 pounds of body in the way of a line ball at third base, and the ball stuck there.

Then came a short program of athletic sports. Making no notes, we are unable to truly record it. We can just remember that the old man's race was won by a short head by Mr. Sage; Mr. McCarthy, of Lockport, second. There were seven starters. In horse-racing slang a head means the average length of a horse's head, but in Mr. Sage's case it is indefinite, so I will say two feet. W. A. Adams won the hop, step and jump; D. Scott, the long jumps. A lady in black—very beautiful—with two white hind fetlocks won the ladies' race. Billy Greiver captured the half-mile race, and Mrs. R. Boettger was easily first in the one-leg race. In the fifty-yard ladies' rolling race Miss La Four won by five yards. An angular form is a great disadvantage in this sport.

At the conclusion of the sports we wandered to the hotel, where we filled several large tables, unfortunately not all in the same room. When Lewis H.

Neubeck, president of the club, called for order, a rough count showed 100 present. The president reviewed the history of our club, started in 1888 to prepare for the first visit of the national society, and said he thought these social events did much to keep our club alive and active, and then called on Old Man Scott to say something. He related a few chestnuts and gave place to W. F. Kasting, who gave us a really sensible talk. His theme was the benefit of our national society, and he urged a better attendance than Buffalo usually turns out. Then we broke up, the prize winners assembling on the veranda, where the lucky ones received their rewards. The prizes were varied and costly. No one worked harder to make affairs go smoothly than Emil Brooker. When business is on hand he is a host. Charles Guenther and Prof. Cowell acted ably as judges of the sports.

The figure eight attracted many before we went home. It was a strenuous one. If you had a lady companion in the same seat you were safe by encircling her waist with a "catch-as-catch-can" sort of hold. I noticed that several of the older men saved their lives by this pleasant method. We have heard no grumbling, and all seemed to have a good time.

Mr. Graham, of Bradford, offered up a thanksgiving prayer when we reached the dock on the American side, for mercies received and dangers escaped. The waves of Lake Erie, perhaps in prehistoric times, have deposited sand back for several hundred feet. It's all sand or plank walk, and in his prayer, Mr. Graham wittily remarked that there was no danger of starvation at Fort Erie because of the "sandwiches there." I hope this ancient joke will not need a key next week.

DETROIT.

The Market.

The back of the dull season is surely broken now, business having picked up considerably. Although funeral work is the main factor, weddings and some few parties are again noticeable.

Good roses and good asters are at a premium. Carnations are better every day, Enchantress showing up the best.

Various Notes.

As the result of a dissolution in partnership C. H. Pease is no longer connected with the Detroit Cut Flower Supply House. Hubert Pierce, the proprietor, is at present also acting as manager.

A visit to Gus Taepke's new range of houses is interesting. Two new rose houses have just been completed. In carnations, they are growing Enchantress, Crane, White Perfection, Flora Hill, Glacier and Guardian Angel. In roses, Bride, Bridesmaid, Killarney, Richmond and Sunrise. Five up-to-date houses are devoted to this stock and but for a slight touch of mildew on the roses it is in fine shape. Foley ventilators are used throughout, giving entire satisfaction.

Joseph Berry's private place in Grosse Pointe Farms is receiving a thorough overhauling. Henry Fruck, the head gardener, has some fine specimens of his new fern, Nephrolepis Fruckii.

P. J. Hauswirth and George Asmus, of Chicago, stopped off at Detroit Saturday, en route from Niagara Falls. E. J. Fancourt, representing S. S. Pennock, of Philadelphia, also was a visitor.

H. S.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The situation may be briefly summed in this way: flowers are very plentiful. There are far more than enough to fill all requirements. Best stock brings fair prices, as a rule, but many of the poorer flowers are wasted.

Asters are seen everywhere. It is probable that more fine flowers could fair demand for choice flowers, although at times they are hard to sell. Greens are abundant.

Various Notes.

The directors of the Philadelphia Wholesale Flower Market have called a meeting of the stockholders to be held on Tuesday, September 25, at 3 p. m., in the secretary's office, Horticultural hall, to consider plans for liquidation.

Xavier E. Schmidt, superintendent of Horticultural hall in Fairmount park, is preparing a catalogue that will embrace all the greenhouse plants under his charge. Mr. Schmidt is a botanist of great ability, and his work when complete will be of decided value.

John McIntyre, the "buyer of Philadelphia," will on Monday, October 1, start in business as a wholesale florist at 1235-1237 Filbert street, where he has rented four stalls in the Flower Market. Mr. McIntyre has had valuable experience with Heron & Nisbet, Joseph Heacock, Edw. Reid, H. H. Battles and The Leo Niessen Co. He is an excellent judge of flowers, energetic, and the retail florists say he calls the birds every morning. Mr. McIntyre's belief that a good buyer is necessarily a good seller will now be proved.

P. J. Klingsporn is out among the growers.

Chas. F. Edgar, who has many friends in this city, is now with Edw. Reid.

The Leo Niessen Co. have found shipments of wild smilax very useful in the department store openings.

The price of rooted cuttings of Carnation John E. Haines in Samuel S. Pennock's card should have read $12 per 100, not $6 per 100.

Chas. Henry Fox had the first white chrysanthemums at the Sign of the Rose last Wednesday.

J. J. Habermehl's Sons, the Wm. Graham Co., and B. Stahl have been doing some decorating at the department stores.

Julius Wolff, Jr., is cutting some nice cattleyas and oncidiums from his place at Twenty-eighth street and Sedgley avenue.

be used, but poor asters are a drug. Dahlias hardly seem as important a factor as at this time last year. The supply at several places is late. It is said that the best flowers will come in at the end of this week, and continue until frost. Carnations are abundant, with no special demand for them as yet. ceiving bunches of wild cherry, gum and oak.

M. Rice & Co. find that the buyers are almost uniformly increasing their orders over those of last season.

Paul Berkowitz returned from a two weeks' business trip last Monday. A glance at his joyous face was enough.

The Philadelphia Carnation Co., Robt. Crawford, Jr., and Harry Crawford, has its houses in splendid condition for the coming season. It has added several acres of ground for soil, etc. The mushroom beds are already under way.

Harry Bayersdorfer has five large consignments on different steamers in this week. He hopes to be in his new building by November 1.

Violets have been in this market for two weeks. They are of only fair quality but seem to sell.

A. B. Cartledge is off on a two weeks' cruise in his yacht.

Every florist knows that Victor Groszans presides over the destinies of Logan. In fact, that Logan, without Mr. G. would be like the play of Hamlet with the principal actor omitted. Imagine, then, the surprise of one of the profession this week when on inquiring for Mr. Grossans of a hammer and saw man working in front of one of the houses, he was told: "Don't know any such person."

Thomas B. Fitzgerald, of Beaver, Pa., has been spending several days in this city as a guest of his former lieutenant, Wm. C. Harry, of the Sign of the Rose. He has visited the growers, shops and supply houses, spent a day at Riverton and another at Atlantic City. Mr. Fitzgerald is a firm believer in himself, in the best of everything and in the future of western Pennsylvania.

The Coming Season.

The season of 1906-07 which may properly be said to begin at Thanksgiving day, November 29, will end on Ash Wednesday, February 13. This makes the season two weeks shorter than last year. These facts are of special interest at this time, because last year's records show that most of our growers allowed their plants of roses, carnations, violets, etc., to bloom too freely during the mild fall, and as a consequence they cut very few flowers during midwinter.

While no two seasons are alike, these facts borne in mind may help some of us to secure the best possible results from our plants.

The People's Gardens.

Oglesby B. Paul, landscape gardener of Fairmount park, has evidently made up his mind that there shall be no waste space under the ample roof of Horticultural hall. It was recorded in these columns last year that the big room at the southwest corner where on summer afternoons Prof. Rothrock was wont to gather the faithful, had been converted into a cactus house. Now the superintendents' and park guards' offices at the south entrance have been removed, the houses next them extended and their place covered by beds for miscellaneous plants. The houses at the north end have been likewise extended, so that there remains practically no waste space except the landscape gardener's office, which will probably remain.

A charge noted by every visitor is the failure to record time on the east or Schuylkill river terrace of the hall this season. For thirty years the cen-ennial year, 1876, has been laid out, usually in echeverias, on one side of the broad marble steps, while the figures of the current year have been seen on the other. This year the green of the terrace is interrupted only by a maltese cross on either side of the main entrance. The orchids are steadily increasing in numbers, the collection now embracing many choice varieties dear to the heart of the superintendent, who is an ardent lover of orchids. In a small nursery set apart for rare trees and shrubs are some choice oaks that are being grown to mature size before planting in the places intended. The gordonia tree, a rare specimen, is now in bloom near the new Japanese temple gateway, lately erected by two public-spirited citizens. PHIL.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Last week was a bad one. Some wholesalers said it was the worst of the summer. It certainly was hot, humid and depressing. But it turned cooler Sunday, and the week opens with better prospects; the wheels of the fall business should soon be moving briskly. Many weddings are announced among the rich; new theaters opening, and new retail stores, lots of them. And stock is beginning to return to its old-time form. A good early frost will tone things up, cut out the surplus of common goods and further the common interest in better times.

The roses are improving daily. There will be no more cleaning up at a loss, let us hope, and there can be no danger of it if the quality is up to the New York standard. The finest asters frequently could not get above $1 per hundred last week, and the common stuff had no price. It's a shame to send some of it here at all, and it is pathetic to look into the barrels of some of the wholesalers, and realize how seriously some of the growers must talk "when their ship comes in."

Beauties are fine again. The best sell at good, strong prices. The demand is growing.

Carnations are low, and will not be themselves till the chrysanthemums are gone. The vanguard is already here. J. K. Allen had some fine white and pink on sale September 12. Soon the vast chrysanthemum army will invade us, and a new king will hold sway for sixty days at least.

Gladioli have had their day. Fine dahlias from Lovett, Herbert and local growers now are arriving in quantity. Some of them are superb, but the demand is light and prices low. The cactus and single varieties are, of course, the favorites, and they are beautiful. It seems hard to find the niche for them which their loveliness of coloring and variety deserve! No one seems to care for the despised tuberose. Its odor is not inspiring. But there is a lot of it for sale.

We are pleased with the results obtained, and the high standing of many of the florists from whom we have received orders through your paper, makes it especially valuable.

The street men are coming back. That will help things quite a little. The summer resorts all are closing; another week will end them.

Various Notes.

Next Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, at the American Institute, the seventy-fifth annual exhibition takes place. It is termed a "grand dahlia show," and there also will be orchids, herbaceous flowers, palms, fruits and vegetables. Liberal prices and a good show may be depended on. The room is altogether inadequate for the display, though it has never been overtaxed by the attendance.

Mr. Hentz, of Moore, Hentz & Nash, was in the city last Thursday and elaborated a plan whereby the U. S. Express Co. may be made to realize there is a law of retribution from which they cannot escape. He advocates the use of paper boxes for shipping flowers, and illustrates the practicability of his suggestions by showing the same amount of roses can be sent in a paper box weighing three pounds, as in a wooden one weighing thirteen pounds; also in the big Beauty boxes weighing four pounds the same stock as formerly was sent in boxes weighing twenty-seven pounds. Between this plan and the pony express the independent and discourteous company will be made to realize it is not as almighty as it thought.

Gunther Bros. are handling the Herbert & Son dahlia shipments. J. K. Allen and A. J. Guttman look after the Lovett shipments. Several New Yorkers contemplate the trip to White Marsh, Md., on Wednesday to view the skill of R. Vincent, Jr. & Son in this and other horticultural lines, joining the Philadelphia contingent on the way. The New York wholesalers are trying faithfully to popularize the dahlia. The hot spell has been sadly against the effort, but from now on a better demand is anticipated.

Mr. and Mrs. John H. Taylor, of Bay-side, are back from their European trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Jos. J. Levy are back from their wedding trip to the Falls and through the Thousand Islands to Montreal, and home via Lake Champlain and the Hudson.

C. S. Christianson, one of the old-time florists, formerly at 67 East Tenth street, died last week from cancer of the stomach, after a long illness and great suffering. He had been over twenty-five years in the florists' business in this city, and was 55 years of age.

Some months ago he disposed of his business to Wernz & Koehne, who are conducting it successfully at the same address. Mr. Christianson was much esteemed by all who knew him, and his career was an honorable and successful one.

Traendly & Schenck's windows lately have been made attractive by a fine display of Farleyense ferns in pots, which sold rapidly.

The auction season opened at Elliott's on Tuesday of this week, with a fine stock of palms and plants for the retail florists.

Arthur Boddington has been enjoying a well-earned vacation at the Maine resorts.

Lincoln Pierson, president of the U-bar Co., has been enjoying his vacation at Asbury Park, N. J., and is now nursing an attack of hay fever at his home in Madison, N. J.

The retail florists on Broadway and Fifth avenue have had an experience with a handsome young lady that caused some careless language. She ordered flowers sent C. O. D. to a theater. Handsome bunches of Beauties, fine baskets and be-ribboned plants all found their way to the theater at the same hour, and many eyes were opened. The feelings of the delivering contingent can be imagined. But misery loves company, and there was a lot of misery. It is early in the season, and the lesson came in good time, so that the pitfall may be avoided hereafter. But, as one of the retail men said, "She was very handsome, and there you are!"

E. H. Harriman, the railroad magnate, is building a million-dollar mansion on top of the highest of the Ramapo mountains near Tuxedo, and at the base will erect an elaborate range of greenhouses, plans for which already are submitted.

George Ditzenberger, son of Adolph, of the Ditzenberger Bros., formerly of Bay Ridge, N. Y., is building a range of glass at Woodcliff, N. J., to be devoted to carnations.

James Mallon, of Brooklyn, is visiting at Madison, N. J., piloted by another veteran. James Hart, the wholesale florist, is looking over the ground with a view to locating a country home in this famous Jersey town.

Frank Clarke, one of the Clarke Bros., of Portland, Ore., is in New York, with a view to completing his musical education.

Frank Traendly, of Traendly & Schenck, is devoting this week to his annual missionary calls on his big list of wholesale growers.

The bowlers are getting back from Europe. Louis Schmutz has returned from la belle France, and Phil Kessler will arrive shortly from the Vaterland! There are only a few of them left over there. There is some prospect of a bowling club in New York this winter. Captain Lang is back from his summer farming, and already averaging nearly 200. With so many good bowlers as the New York Club now possesses there is no excuse for another season passing without a club worthy of the city. This year Long Island furnished four-fifths of the team that bowled at Dayton.

H. E. Froment's big store is now complete and ready for the rush. Chrysanthemums, Beauties and violets will be specialties, as usual.

A. L. Young & Co. will have a fifty-foot store when all improvements are completed.

Indications now point to the selection of the club's popular caterer and musical director as the next president of this growing organization. The honor would be well merited, and the office filled with skill and dignity.

Thursday of this week the Jewish New Year will be celebrated, and gifts of flowers are the popular tokens provided. There has been a great booking of orders already by the prominent retailers.

Alex. McConnell's new store is now about perfect. The office is being installed this week. Grand palms and foliage plants add to the superb furnishings, and altogether there is no more roomy, elegant and complete florists' store in the city. Up at his nursery in New Rochelle is an abundance of choice retinisporas, Japan cedars and blue spruce, well worth a visit. At the great naval review last week, Mr. McConnell took a large party in his yacht up and down the line, giving a splendid view of the nation's magnificent defenders.

Mr. Hanft, formerly with Thos. Young, Jr., now is with Fleischman in his Fifth avenue store. The window display here is prominent and novel. His latest novelty in all his stores is his nursery rhyme "Flower Boxes," a unique attraction. Rumor credits Fleischman with another stand in the Wall street section, close to the big, handsome store of Van Praag, where Leonard Becker, formerly with Small, is in charge. Mr. Van Praag is greatly pleased with his success down among the bulls and bears.

The favorite window dressing with all the retailers this season seems to be the graceful cibotium fern. It is everywhere, and is being grown now by all the prominent plant wholesalers of this section.

The retail windows grow more attractive weekly. Small & Sons still maintain a wonderful water lily display.

Truman C. Flagler, of Poughkeepsie, has opened a retail store at 926 Fulton street, Brooklyn. He will have an abundance of violets and carnations from his own greenhouses, and in the best part of the City of Churches, should build up an excellent trade. The store has been thoroughly refurnished and has been established since 1892.

Mr. Bowe and family are back from the sea shore, and the handsome store

The Market.

Business is good for this season of the year. There is not much doing in the cut flower market but all good stock sells well and the wholesalers are busy with bulb and supply shipments. There is every indication that we are now at the opening of a brisk winter's business, for the territory which takes supplies from this market steadily is widening and the business within the radius constantly is developing.

Various Notes.

The craft picnicked Sunday, September 16, on the grounds adjoining the new greenhouses of the C. C. Pollworth Co. Some original advertising cards had been sent out and there was a good attendance. Games and refreshments made the afternoon most pleasant. Nearly everyone won a prize.

Louis E. Herzberg, who is at present foreman for J. B. Heiss, Dayton, O., and Miss Ida Gerlach were married at the residence of John Valom, Lake Drive, in this city, Monday, September 17. Mr. Herzberg formerly was employed in some of the leading greenhouses in this city, also in the park system here. Although he is now making his home in Dayton he still is a member of the Milwaukee Florists' Club and has the best wishes of the trade here.

F. H. Holton is back from his trip east after the convention and again hard at work. He picked up some desirable stock while on his travels.

The annual state fair was held here last week. The exhibits in agriculture and horticulture were good. Currie Bros. Co. made a clean sweep, carrying off thirteen first premiums.

HINSDALE, MASS.—H. J. Smith is in Canada visiting relatives. He went there from Dayton, O., where he attended the convention.

MUNCIE, IND.—Mrs. Geo. Miller has nearly completed the addition of one house and the installation of a new boiler. The Muncie Floral Co. has purchased the glass and steam fittings of the old Harry Lee place, at Alexandria, and removed them to Muncie.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.
Pres., Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va.; First Vice-Pres., Charles Burge, Toledo, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 25th annual meeting will be held at New York City, June, 1907.

BENJ. DULANEY, with J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, and Miss Katherine Whiteley, Bonaparte, Ia., were married September 10.

THE Walker Seed Co., Oklahoma City, Okla., which went into the hands of a receiver March 24, has settled with its creditors on the basis of 40 cents on the dollar.

HENRY W. WOOD, president of the American Seed Trade Association, says the anti-free-seed movement is in full swing and he is hopeful success will crown the campaign.

HJALMAR HARTMANN, representing H. Hartmann & Co., seed growers, of Copenhagen, Denmark, spent last week in New York, making headquarters at 31 Barclay street, and is now calling on the principal seedsmen en route to Chicago.

THE tomato canners will end their season this week and from all sections of the country report short crops. Tomatoes in Baltimore were worth 50 cents a bushel September 14, as against a normal price of 25 to 30 cents.

THE U. S. Department of Agriculture reports that in its investigations for 1905, the average value of farm lands was found to have increased thirty-three and a half per cent from 1900 to 1905. The largest increase is in the cotton lands of the south, forty and two-tenths per cent. Next in increase are the western states, and then the south Atlantic region. Some of the New England states show a slight decrease. In the years 1890-1900, the average increase was twenty-five per cent.

It appears that the posting of Albert Dickinson's membership in the Chicago Board of Trade was intended to stir up the animals, and has created something approaching consternation among the bulls and bears. The Dickinson Co. has been prominent on the Chicago board for thirty years. Individuals connected with the house now hold twelve memberships, only one of which has been posted for transfer, but it is expected the others will follow unless, as seems not unlikely, a change in the rules may be made to secure the continued participation of the Dickinson Co. The Chicago board is reluctant to see so much business diverted to other markets.

THE steamer Amsterdam, reaching New York September 10, brought 3,308 cases of Dutch bulbs. The importance of Maltus & Ware, of New York, in the bulb importing line is shown by the fact that out of this shipment 2,882 cases were consigned in their care.

YELLOW trefoil is not used to any extent as a forage plant in the United States, but the seed is imported from Europe at about 5 cents per pound for use as an adulterant of red clover and alfalfa seed. Although bur clover is cultivated in the Gulf states, the seed found mixed with that of alfalfa is not the commercial bur clover seed of this country, but a by-product secured in cleaning South American wool, and is imported from Germany in low-grade alfalfa seed.

a lot of damage having been done in Germany; a great shortage is certain.

Little can be added to what has already been said as to the conditions of general crops for the whole of the present season, and it may be now generally accepted as a fact that all vegetable and farm seed crops will be short in yield per acre, and in many sorts in number of acres cultivated. Every report of the condition of crops points to this, and in some lines the shortage will be acutely felt, as there is little or no surplus left over from last year.

Samples generally will be poor in color and weight, but germination will as a rule be high. Abundant proof of this may be gathered from the facts that in Italy at least one firm is offering no colored onion seed of this year's growth, and some other firms are offering no cauliflower seed at all this year. One of the leading French firms of seed growers is offering only yearling seed of radish in at least half the catalogued varieties, and some few sorts are not being offered at all this year.

The total loss of the colored onion crops will be keenly felt by the whole of the European trade, and indirectly by dealers in America, as last year's crops were entirely cleaned out; and the whole supply depended on this year's harvest. The trouble will be much aggravated by mildew and other troubles experienced in other onion varieties, practically every district throughout Europe being badly affected. Italy is of course free from mildew, the climate being too dry for it. Holland has probably suffered the worst in this respect. Prudent buyers of seeds will do well to make their season's arrangements early, as high prices are asked in some cases already. There is no doubt that prices will steadily advance all through the season, especially for first-class samples.

In flowers most lines appear likely to yield a middling to good crop, the exceptions perhaps being pansies, wall-flowers and stocks. These are in a poor way. Nasturtiums appear to be exceptionally heavy everywhere, and look like yielding far above the average. Taken as a whole, there probably will be no shortage in flower seeds, but rather the reverse. The board of agriculture of England has received information that the diamond-back moth has appeared in Norfolk and some other parts of the eastern counties, and is doing considerable damage among the turnip, cabbage and other crops of the brassica tribe. The board is freely distributing a leaflet dealing with the pest, and methods of prevention.

The wholesale seed houses of England which have the bulk of their supplies grown on contract by various English and continental growers, are considerably alarmed at the almost certain shortage of the yield of their contract growths, particularly in radish, cauliflower, spinach and onion, and in these four lines particularly are vigorously seeking to supplement their supplies by ordinary growths; this is yet another factor causing prices to tighten, and will also cause some speculative transactions which will also tend to make values keen.

HOWLING MOB SWEET CORN.

This is a new introduction of W. Atlee Burpee & Co., Philadelphia, so named because the originator asserts that when he offers the first load in market the buyers collect about his stall in a mob, each trying to secure a few dozen ears of the earliest large corn grown in his locality. Our sowing was made late in May for succession to such extra early kinds as Malakhov and Sheffield, and furnished large rounded, 14-rowed ears of very white corn with white cob by the second week in August. These plump, heavy ears, with their broad and deep white kernels, doubtless appear taking in the dealer's eyes, as they look as if the consumer would get big measure for his money. The quality, however, is only fair at the best stage and quickly falls off as maturity progresses. This is not an undesirable feature for truckers, as a field may be cleared in two or three pickings and the land made ready for succession crops, but the home gardener usually prefers varieties continuing longer in edible condition. The stalks are short, sturdy and exceptionally even and vigorous in growth, well furnished with long, dark-green leaves. About every one bears its plump and heavy ear. In this locality buyers usually prefer small ears of the Ne Plus Ultra type, but are, of course, content with other kinds when brought in early. Howling Mob is certainly of quick growth and may well bear out the introducer's claim of being only five days later than White Cory. Its vigor and hardiness would give it a good start if planted early.—W. Van Fleet in Rural New Yorker.

WILL GROW BULBS.

E. A. Asmus, of Chicago, has organized the firm of Alexander, Asmus & Co., to engage in bulb growing in Whatcom county, Washington, where George Gibbs and others have for some years produced such fine stock. Alexander, Asmus & Co. propose to put the business on purely a commercial basis. They have options on three pieces of suitable property, and Mr. Asmus left Chicago September 15 for the Bellingham bay district to make a final selection of location.

The commonly known Dutch bulbs will be grown: tulips, daffodils, hyacinths, crocuses, etc. It also is planned eventually to engage in the nursery business, growing such stock as is ordinarily imported from Holland and Belgium, including holly, rhododendrons, box, and other ornamental plants.

E. A. Asmus is the son of Rudolph Asmus, and the nephew of the late Ernst Asmus, of West Hoboken, N. J. He was at one time associated with Emil Buettner in the retail flower business at Chicago, and has had some years' experience in the bulb trade.

DUTCH BULB PRICES RISE.

From prices which are now being offered for nearly all the best varieties of tulips it would make one think that the old tulip mania was again approaching. The fact is, however, that the present craze for starting new tulip cultures in the north of this country has caused an unusual demand for all sorts of tulips to be planted out, and more especially the varieties that have proven to be the best for market as cut flowers. This, combined with a very brisk demand for the American markets, has made prices go up in leaps and bounds and this has also caused other varieties to go up and has considerably affected the ordinary export trade. At the present moment mixed tulips are at a premium and hard to get while many of the cheaper sorts of tulips have been cleared off the market entirely. It may be said that all the red and scarlet sorts are scarcer than ever both in single and double tulips.

Hyacinths have also cleared off well so far and of the cheaper grades nothing is left on the hands of the growers. As was expected early in the season, crocuses are very short and prices nearly double last year's, notwithstanding that the crop has been good. Narcissi are

YELLOW TREFOIL DUTY FREE.

On September 5 the Board of General Appraisers sustained the protest of Benj. Dusenbury against the assessment of duty on yellow trefoil seed at the port of New York. The merchandise was described as consisting of the seed of the yellow trefoil or black medic (Medicago lupulina), which was classified under the provision in paragraph 254, tariff act of 1897, for seeds not specially provided for, and was claimed to be free of duty under paragraph 656 as grass seed. In writing the decision General Appraiser Waite said:

"It is invoiced as clover seed, which the board has hitherto classed as grass seed for tariff purposes, G. A. 2442 (T. D. 14720). While Medicago lupulina probably is not clover in a botanical sense, which would seem to include only plants of the genus trifolium, it has the appearance of clover, is closely allied to that plant, and is classified as a clover in the catalogues of seed dealers if not in common speech. But whether to be regarded as clover or not, the plant in question is shown by the evidence to be a forage plant such as would fall in the category of the so-called 'artificial grasses,' and is, therefore, entitled to free entry under paragraph 656 in accordance with the principle applied in board decision In re Willett Drug Company, G. A. 6350 (T. D. 27306)."

MINNESOTA CLOVER.

The Arena, published at Brainerd, Minn., advises the farmers as follows:

In this section of the state, where red clover can be grown so easily, it would be well to pay more attention to the raising of seed for market. There is no part of the state where the plant can be grown to such perfection as central Minnesota, and the seed from clover grown here is of superior quality, as was evidenced when such seedsmen as Northrup, King & Co., of Minneapolis, pronounced seed shipped to them by J. R. Smith, of this place, the finest they ever saw. There has been no means of threshing the seed, that raised by Mr. Smith having been threshed by an ordinary threshing machine, which is wasteful at the best. The ordinary yield of seed per acre from the common red clover is about five bushels, which at the average price of selling places it above the yield of wheat as a money maker, and the farmers of a community could club together and purchase a huller, which could be run after the fall work of the farm is finished. The price charged for hulling by men who own machines is $1 per bushel. Wheat at $1 per bushel, which is far above the average price, even though the yield obtained were twenty bushels per acre, is vastly inferior in value to a field of clover which will thresh out five bushels of seed per acre, and, when the cost of growing the two is compared, the clover stands alone in a class by itself and the threshed straw is valuable for stock feeding.

DES MOINES, IA.

The Iowa Seed Co. has just completed the erection of two new greenhouses and is building five more at Thirtieth and Kingman boulevard. The company is also constructing an immense seed warehouse at Altoona adjoining the interurban railway, for the storing of grain raised there. The new warehouse will have a storage capacity of 25,000 bushels. The company owns a large farm near Altoona and also rents some land, so that altogether about 800 acres of land are used.

"We are making Altoona our growing point for field seeds," said Chas. N. Page. "After experimenting in many sections of the state we have learned that Altoona and vicinity is the best point in the state to grow grain, especially corn. Take it year after year the land about Altoona produces the best crops of any section I know about."

The Florists' Manual

We note your advertisement in a recent number of the REVIEW of the second edition of Scott's Florists' Manual, and request that you enter our order for a copy of this valuable book. The writer is thoroughly acquainted with the first edition of this work, having often had occasion to use it for reference while a student at the Michigan Agricultural College. Please rush this order, for we feel, with Mark Twain, that we "would rather not use violence."

CLEVELAND.

On October 1 the Gasser Co. will open a new wholesale cut flower store in the Osborn block. The location is ideal for the business, as it is in what is locally termed "the new center," and as the store fronts on both Prospect avenue and Huron road it gives them an excellently lighted store and one of easy access. They are fitting up both the first floor and basement as shipping and stock rooms and expect to have ample space during the rush periods, which they have not had heretofore. This move was made necessary by their ever increasing wholesale trade, which has entirely outgrown the space allotted to it at their retail store on Euclid avenue. Each business will be run independently of the other.

WINFIELD, KAN.—E. H. Gilbert says trade has been and is good; business increases faster than he can add to his facilities.

COLDWATER, MICH.—Van Aken Bros. have just purchased twenty acres adjoining their greenhouse establishment, making forty acres devoted to growing flowers and vegetables.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas. C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

W. L. E. GREEN has gone into the nursery business at Wood River, Neb.

THE call for decorative stock in sizes for immediate effect keeps right on leading the supply.

E. P. BERNARDIN, Parsons, Kan., has been in Texas looking for a new location for the nursery business.

SOME interesting notes on the nurseries of Salem, Ore., will be found on the Pacific coast page of this issue.

CHRIS. CHRISTIANSEN, agent for a Grand Island, Neb., nursery, became insane while traveling and was sent to the asylum at Clarinda, Ia.

M. V. ROOF has been elected secretary of the Mt. Sinai Cemetery Association, Crozier, Ind. Considerable new work is planned.

PIERCE & CLARK, proprietors of the Grand Rapids Nursery Co., Grand Rapids, Mich., combine with the business dealings in real estate and the brokerage of insurance.

SHIELDS BROS., nurserymen, of Charlottesville, Ind., are giving a fruit display to stimulate interest in nursery plants. The prizes consist of stock of various kinds from their place.

NURSERYMEN APPEAL.

The case of Stark Bros. vs. F. S. Glazer and A. Pfifer, from Kay county, was appealed September 10 to the Oklahoma Supreme Court. The defendants secured a judgment in the lower court, quieting the title to a quarter section of land which they purchased from Fred Bowers. Stark Bros. claimed an interest in the land, presenting a lien for $450 worth of fruit trees sold to Bowers. The latter claimed the trees arrived in bad condition and refused to pay for them.

STOCK FOR STANDARD ROSES.

Will high-stemmed roses grafted on Rosa canina do better than on Rosa rugosa, and is anybody handling the first kind, or do they have to be imported? I never have seen them advertised. In Germany and Scandinavia they are supposed to be the only kind of roses to plant. Besides the price would be more than double. Are seedlings of Rosa canina on the market? T. N.

In Europe Rosa canina nearly altogether is used as a stock for standard roses, which we presume the correspondent means by high-stemmed roses. During the last few years, however, quite a number have been imported and planted in the east worked on Rosa rugosa, which has proved much hardier and safer to use as a stock for standard roses than R. canina. There are two forms of R. rugosa, one coming from Russia and the other from Japan. The Russian form has proved very much hardier than the Japanese one. R. canina is a native of Europe, western Asia and northern Africa. We could not recommend it in preference to R. rugosa. We do not know of any firms here who can supply seedlings, and it would probably have to be imported. W. N. C.

MR. HALE ON ADVERTISING.

At the banquet given at the Auditorium hotel May 22 by Frank B. White and associates some 600 advertisers and publishers were assembled. One of the speakers was J. H. Hale, well known as fruit grower and nurseryman, ex-president of the American Pomological Society. Some of the things he said are so applicable to the business of every florist, nurseryman and seedsman that a part of his address is printed here.

The first money I earned as a boy, said Mr. Hale, I spent with the nurserymen then advertising. I planted those fruits and trees upon the old rocky farm at home. Most of them were standard varieties, but I bought a few new things to go in with the old, because the nurseryman told me a great story about them in his catalogue, and after I had had them growing a year or two, one of these varieties was being talked about and advertised, and a neighbor in the town asked me if I had ever heard of this particular strawberry. "Why, yes, I have been growing it for two years," I said. "Well, would you sell me any plants?" "Yes." "How much?" "A dollar a hundred." "Why, I have seen them advertised and I can send down to Rochester and get them for $2." Well, that set me to thinking what there was in advertising. The plants right at home he hardly wanted to buy for $1 because he had seen them advertised away from home and he could get them for $2.

Advertising Creates Value.

Well, I got the idea that advertising put value into things in some way that I did not understand, and so I took up in a very moderate way in the home papers the advertising of my fruit and I raised my price from $1 to $2, and I found I sold more at $2 when I advertised than I had sold at $1 when I did not advertise.

In the meantime I was developing the peach orchards, planting them in an uncongenial climate, as New England was thought to be. By taking care of them at considerable expense, the orchards were finally developed into fruit-bearing trees. I conceived the idea of sorting and very carefully packing the fruit honestly from top to bottom in boxes—not because I was honest, but because I wanted the money and I knew that would get it. And so they were packed very honestly, and then I advertised that every package was carefully sorted, and I had a label put upon every package, guaranteeing the contents. Those labels cost us about 40 cents a thousand, and we sold them after they were pasted on the package for 50 cents apiece. And really my first start in life was obtained in selling red labels on peach baskets at 50 cents each which cost 40 cents a thousand.

Know Your Customer.

Another thing, I found that it paid to come in close contact with the consumer. There is a pleasure in it and I believe there is a profit in it to the man who gets acquainted as well as he can with his people and lets them know him. One of my rules in business in the early days in selling small fruit and peaches was that I would not sell to any retailer who would not first come out to the farm and see how things were growing. I wanted him to get in touch with the plants and the trees as they grew there, and the method, and give him the feeling that here was something a little better than he was getting elsewhere. We used to induce the grocers from the nearby cities to come once a year.

ELIZABETH NURSERY CO., Elizabeth, N. J.

Mention The Review when you write.

In later years, as my peach orchards have grown larger and as I have established others in Georgia that cover some few thousand acres, I have gone to the commission men in nearly all the large cities and told them I wanted them to make a trip to Georgia, and I looked after them while they were there. They came down and spent a day in getting acquainted with Hale's farm, and Hale's trees, and Hale's method of packing and sorting the fruit and everything, and they went home so full of it that they could sell fruit at higher prices for me and make a greater commission for themselves, and it was a profitable thing all around. That closer acquaintance which I have insisted upon for a number of years in my business has been profitable to me and profitable to the men who have handled my goods.

Label Your Stock.

My nursery business has been only the outgrowth of the fruit business. I believe I can say it without question that I was the first man to put fruit on the market and in the hands and the homes of the consumers so they knew whose fruit it was. If it was poor they would not buy any more, and if it was good they bought more of it. I not only tried to make it so good that they would want more of it, but I determined that they should pay a price greater than the price they paid for the same goods not so well put up.

I have a friend, a merchant, who failed in business and who took to farming, and one of his ideas was to do things a little better than anybody else, and then let the people know he was doing it. He used to pack his berries nicely, and after they were placed in the basket, he would put in a card giving his name and in large type he had printed on that card, "Price always 5 cents above the market." He had the courage to tell the people that, but they paid it readily and always came back for more.

We especially recommend the New Japonica Rosea. Color, fine, rich pink, about the shade of Gloire de Lorraine Begonia; coloring is even and does not show the white or washed-out shadings sometimes seen in Otaksa. Foliage, uniform deep green and does not streak nor yellow. Has taken medals in Europe and is a distinct acquisition. Our plants are grown outdoors in beds and flat houses; will be taken inside before frost, and available for delivery next month, when wanted.

Make Things Interesting.

A few years ago he had a magnificent crop of potatoes, and he went down to Boston, but the best he could do was 50 cents a bushel. Then he went to the nearby market, but found he could do no better. So he went down to Boston again and he talked the matter over with the fancy dealers and he said to them, "I wonder if these people living here wouldn't buy potatoes all nice and clean, if I washed them and put them up in bags," and the dealer gave him an order for a few. Now, all old farmers know that if you wash potatoes you will spoil them; they won't keep. Well, he didn't want to keep them, he wanted to sell them; and he bought 400 new sacks at 4 cents apiece and he shipped them out home and took a wagon-load of potatoes and hauled them down to the creek and dumped them in and got the boys to peel off their clothes and jump in and wash those potatoes there. Then he had them put up, sixty pounds of perfectly clean potatoes in a new sack, and he put his name on them with the name of the variety of potato, and shipped 100 bushels down to Boston, writing the dealer that he had better get a dollar a bushel. He only sent 100 bushels as an experiment. Three days after he sent them he received a telegram, saying, "All sold. Send us another lot." Well, he sold the whole lot at 40 or 50 cents above the market because he had the good sense to wash them and have the potato advertise that there was something underneath the dirt.

And that is true of a great many lines of work. I have seen celery in your market that was tied up with ordinary string selling at 10 cents a bunch, or 20 to 25 cents, whatever the price may be. I have seen the same celery tied with a pink cotton tape, which doesn't cost more than 5 cents a mile, and that same celery was selling for forty per cent more than the other. Now, the people in Chicago or Pittsburg don't chew cotton tape, they don't eat cotton tape, but they will pay forty per cent more for celery that is tied with pink cotton tape, because it is attractive to the eye. That is advertising.

The Seedless Apple.

Now, you newspaper men are earning your money, and a good deal of your income comes from nurserymen, florists and seedsmen of this country for their advertising. I know the majority of them personally, and a more honorable, upright, fair lot of men does not live on the face of the earth than that class of men. Now, I noticed recently one or two pictures in one of our newspapers, together with a great big article that had all the earmarks of a paid writeup on it, telling of a certain worthless, seedless apple that is going to be foisted on the market pretty soon. By advertising of this sort probably some gullible people will buy that thing, and probably a few million dollars will be spent on them. Now, a few million dollars out of the pockets of the farmers of the United States won't hurt them, because they have got it; but if you take it out of the pockets of the nurserymen, it will hurt them, and it is advertising of this kind that does it. The majority of these men are clean and free from it, and for every dollar that the newspapers get out of that kind of advertising they lose $10 from the honest nursery trade of the country. Gentlemen, every time you help along a fraud of that kind you are hurting yourself.

PACIFIC COAST.

PROSPECTS AT FRISCO.

A visit among several of the leading growing establishments in the vicinity of San Francisco shows that not a few of the largest dealers have faith in the ability of the city to recover her lost ground and recoup her business prestige. There are probably about twenty first-class stores in town, as against seventy-five six months ago, and from present appearances there is room for several more. Regarding the volume of business done, all the retailers agree that they are doing as much trade as they did one year ago, and the prospects for a continuance are just as favorable.

A New Remarkable Carolina Mountain Plant

Stenanthium Robustum, or Mountain Feather Fleece

This remarkable hardy perennial is, without doubt, one of our best new introductions, and may be classed with the showiest of all herbaceous plants. As the buds begin to unfold in early August they are quite upright, and a light green tinge, gradually becoming whiter until at last they burst forth into a veritable snowbank of drooping, fleecy bloom of purest white, the panicles often 2 to 3 feet long. In September the flowers, as they ripen, turn to shades of pink and purple. It is a vigorous perennial, attaining a height of from 5 to 8 feet when well established, and is absolutely hardy throughout the United States and Canada. The Mountain Feather Fleece is of easy cultivation, and if given plenty of food, makes a wonderful show equalled by few plants of any description. The illustration gives some idea of the wonderful effect of Stenanthium when in full bloom, but inadequately conveys the beauty of the delicate, feathered, drooping flowers. When known will be planted by thousands.

With the population of the town decreased at least fifty per cent it is certain that there will not be such an outlet for the stock grown, but as the growers have curtailed their growing stock in the same ratio, there should be no difficulty in handling everything. From the standpoint of the growers there is considerable difference of opinion along these lines. Many maintain that it will be several years before prices will recover their former place and, on the other hand, many wholesalers have handled their stock with the usual amount of care and have busied themselves with the disposal of their goods in other places, with the result that considerable good shipping trade has been developed. tion of the coast relies on San Francisco markets for its supplies, this business will be lasting.

I am inclined to think that these wholesalers who have kept their houses up to date will have the most success, financially, as there is no reason to believe that Californians have lost their taste for fine flowers.

Along other lines, I find that there will be but few azaleas, poinsettias, lilies, lilacs, etc., forced for the Christmas trade and but few bulbs, such as hyacinths and tulips. Several growers with whom I have spoken are not inclined to take any risks with such short-lived stock and the selections of everything except roses, carnations and other standard articles will be much curtailed.

The stores in town are relying to a great extent, and have been doing so ever since the fire, on funeral orders. Fancy a town with not one decent theater, public hall or place of amusement and you have San Francisco. Consequently there is almost nothing doing socially and the demand reverts to funeral flowers almost entirely.

Order is being gradually brought out of chaos. Buildings are being rapidly erected and before long we are bound to have a big town again, but opinions are much divided about what the trade will be this season, and the majority favor the idea that we will have to wait another season before we will get well back in the old groove again. SALEM, ORE.

The Oregon Nursery Co. was established in 1867 and incorporated in 1900. They cultivate between 400 and 500 acres and grow a general line of fruit and ornamental stock. M. McDonald is president and A. McGill secretary and treasurer. Mr. McDonald attends to the office and selling end of the business, while Mr. McGill looks after the outside work of growing and shipping. Both are of Canadian birth, coming to this country about fifteen years ago. By hard work and upright dealings they have built up an immense trade. Their growing methods are strictly up to date. Cultivation is begun early in the season and continued until late, so that weeds are almost unknown. Spraying is resorted to several times each season. More than a half million of apple trees are grown each year, comprising upward of 125 varieties. Pears, plums, prunes, cherries, apricots, nectarines, peaches and quinces in large numbers are also propagated.

They are also making a specialty of English walnuts, the Franquette and Mayette varieties being propagated extensively. Large tracts of these are being planted in this state for commercial nut-growing. A tree begins fruiting in four or five years from planting and in ten years produces a paying crop and annually thereafter, the profits being much larger than from fruit trees. A nice block of cut-leaved birch would excite the envy of many an eastern grower. The land is a deep, rich loam, well drained. Nursery crops are rotated with grain and clover, but commercial fertilizers never are used.

It would require a volume to describe the many valuable novelties which this firm is growing. The stock of small fruits, shrubs and ornamentals is complete, while the well arranged and commodious packing shed gives them almost unlimited shipping facilities.

This nursery will be removed to Washington county within the next two years, a 700-acre tract of choice land having been recently purchased about twelve miles west of Portland.

C. F. Lansing established the Quaker Nurseries at Salem about fifteen years ago and now has fifty acres planted to a general line of stock. Everything here betokens thrift and prosperity. The

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Continued warm weather has had the effect of drying up outdoor stock and making greenhouse stock plentiful. There has been a fair demand for carnations and roses and fair prices have been realized. Asters are about through flowering and, as it will be at least ten days before we have much in the line of chrysanthemums, there will be little to draw on. Quantities of amaryllises have been used by the retailers and they have proven to be one of the best selling fall flowers. Sweet peas are short of stem and do not find such ready sale as they did early in the season.

A few violets have made their appearance and are costing the retailers $1 per dozen bunches. Auratum, roseum and rubrum lilies are about over for the season and they have proven one of the best sellers we have had. Valley has been slow sale for several weeks but the chances are that it shortly will be in good demand. Lilium Harrisii is being offered in small lots at the usual price of $1.50 to $2.50 per dozen stems. White dahlias are of good quality and are being used in very large quantities by the retailers, especially in funeral work. Smilax is daily becoming more plentiful, but good adiantum is somewhat scarce.

We are booking orders now for Over in Oakland trade is reported as being fair for the season. A good lot of funeral work has assisted in making ends meet and every one is sanguine for a good winter trade.

Various Notes.

John Young, formerly of the Dwight Way Nurseries, Berkeley, has returned from a three months' visit to Shasta county.

Frank Pelicano & Co. have opened a new establishment on Sutter street, above Van Ness avenue.

John Gill, of West Berkeley, is on a two weeks' trip through Oregon and Washington.

Sievers & Co. have had a successful opening and a good run of orders at their new store on California street. Their show windows are especially attractive.

Tomlin & Co. have leased for two years the greenhouses of the Lacy Co., at Fruitvale.

Cleis & Jacobsen report good trade for August and September. They have had a fine run of funeral work and the prospects for the autumn season are bright.

Fred Worth has returned from a fishing trip to Lake county.

MICHIGAN STATE FAIR.

The Michigan state fair opened August 30 and closed September 7, and was said by all to have been a great success, financially and otherwise. The directors and managers of the fair sent a cordial invitation and a premium list to all the florists of Detroit, for exhibits of flower beds, plants, cut flowers and floral designs, to which many responded. Among them were the firms J. Breitmeyer's Sons, with a collection of remarkably fine, well-grown ferns, and S. Taplin, with a large collection of palms. Several other florists were exhibitors of either plants, flowers or both. As the premium list was headed with the fat-test prize for a collection of stove and greenhouse plants of not less than thirty varieties, it was expected that there would be a sharp contest for such a prize. I think it brought out one such collection.

As the question as to what constitutes a plant to come under the head of stove or greenhouse plant has caused many a spirited controversy, I hope the question is now finally settled by the make-up of this collection. The premium list was as arbitrary as the premium list at a cottage garden exhibition in England, with the exception that there were no prizes for pansies, big gooseberries, new or rare plants, or anything under the head of miscellaneous, which classes as a rule cause more guessing and interest than the balance of the premium list.

The call for beds of the usual run of summer bedding plants did not call out much competition. S. Taplin displayed his new dwarf golden privet in connec-

Such plants as stand and retain foliage through the winter were displayed in the different styles for which they are especially adapted, in ribbon borders, carpet beds, vases, porch-boxes, hanging-baskets, wire stands, designs, lettering, etc., using plants taken up from the open ground about a week before the opening of the fair. In connection with his display of hardy border plants, Mr. Taplin showed specimens of coniferous plants, including fine specimens of Picea pungens, Colorado blue spruce, both erect and weeping forms, and of remarkably fine color. There were several good collections of nursery stock by Michigan nurserymen, not for competition.

CINCINNATI

The Market.

Business has been good for this time of year and all indications point to a continuation of it this week. With the autumnal improvement in the quality of roses and carnations there is always a corresponding improvement in business. Most of the business was funeral work and some high-class designs were made up by several of the stores.

Contrary to all expectations, asters again are almost a glut. At last writing it looked as if there would be only about enough of them the rest of the season to fill orders, but they are pouring in by the thousands and it simply is impossible to find sale for them all. The high-grade blooms are the only ones that sell at a fair price.

Carnations still are short in supply and roses are just about equal to the demand. Beauties are selling first-class and more of them could be disposed of to advantage.

The coming week promises to be a good one. There are several large decorations on and besides that the chrysanthemum will make its initial bow to the public.

Various Notes.

Owing to the fact that there were so few entries for the flower show to be held at the fall festival September 20, the directors decided to call it off and in place W. K. Partridge was given a contract to supply a show on similar lines to the one put up two weeks ago. While it was quite a disappointment not to be able to hold the show on the lines intended, still there is no question that the show Mr. Partridge will make will be one greatly appreciated by the public.

John Evans, of Richmond, Ind., passed through on his way to visit his brother, Chas. Evans, of Columbus, O., who is very sick.

Mrs. Coates and Miss Lysle, who are with W. S. Bell, of Lexington, Ky., were here last week, visiting friends. They made a short call in the wholesale district and had a lot to say about the Lexington fair, which takes place this week.

Benjamin Dulaney and Miss Katherine Whiteley were married at the residence of the bride's cousin in Bonaparte, Ia., last Monday. Mr. Dulaney is well known in seed circles in this city, having for years been connected with the firm of J. Chas. McCullough, whom he represented on the road. They will be at home after October 16, at 1325 Chase avenue.

Among the visitors during the last week were Mrs. Chas. Crouch, of Chattanooga, Tenn., and Mr. Thomas, who is with Bertermann Bros., of Indianapolis. C. J. OHMER.

MABELLE

NEW PINK CARNATION FOR 1907

Color—A peculiar shade of lovely pink, with a faint yellowish cast; several shades lighter than the Lawson. Unlike most pinks, the brightest sun does not injure the color. Size—3 to 4 inches in diameter when established. Odor—Pleasing, but not strong. Stems—Invariably strong, but always graceful, ranging from 12 to 30 inches during the season. Habit, etc.—A very quick, active grower, making specimen plants in a short time, even from late cuttings. On account of its rapid growth, requires supporting very soon after benching. Gets away rapidly, blooms early and gives long stems right from the start. Productiveness—Prodigious is the best word we know of to use here. It is the most incessant bloomer, early and late, we have ever grown. Stock limited. Delivery January 5 to 10 and later. Price $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Another week of extreme heat has not helped business, but has had the effect of bringing in such quantities of asters as to flood everything and everybody; in fact, a salesman in one of the wholesale houses almost shed tears of joy when he made a sale of 100 bunches for $5; it seemed to be anything to get them out of sight.

The small roses coming in fared even worse than the asters. A few of the best supplied all wants and the balance went to the dump. Gladioli have cleaned up nicely all week and more could have been used, but taken as a whole it was unsatisfactory to the wholesalers.

Various Notes.

The retail stores are making fall repairs and changes, each trying to put on something different in the way of arrangement and decoration. There has been lots of growling about slow trade all week with most of them.

Mrs. E. A. Williams seemed to have the lion's share of the horse show business. This with the decoration for the anniversary of McCreery's, the largest department store in the city, kept her people busy all week.

Most of the growers hereabouts still are looking for carnation plants, stem-rot getting the best of some of them.

The Saxonwald Nursery, of Castle Shannon, has torn down and rebuilt the entire plant this summer. Most of the houses already are covered in.

Butz Bros., of New Castle, have rebuilt several old houses and added one new one this summer.

A. W. Smith is making an entire change in the arrangement of his store, adding many improvements, among them a glass awning extending out to the curb.

HOO-HOO.

Doubtless, you have been waiting a long time for ventilating apparatus at a reasonable cost before equipping your houses, or a line that does the work so satisfactorily that it is a pleasure to have in the house. Our customers are all highly pleased with the service we give them. We are quite certain that our prices will suit you. At least give us a chance to figure with you.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

We have had no rain since before the Dayton convention, it has been hot for weeks and everything suffers. Flowers are plentiful. Carnations still are short of stem, but they now will lengthen fast. Roses, considering the hot weather, are of good quality, but inclined to be a little soft.

The West Michigan state fair was held last week. The Grand Rapids Floral Co. and Crabb & Hunter had all the plant entries; Chas. Chadwick, Crabb & Hunter and the Grand Rapids Floral Co. all the cut flower and design entries, while Eli Cross showed carnations and put up a floral piece.

Funeral work was general Monday on account of the demise of A. May, of the Giant Clothing Co., a popular business man.

The aster beetle did its best to ruin all within reach. Hand picking has at last got the pest under control, but the grasshopper is still with us and refuses to go hungry while he can find an aster or carnation to dine on. Violets are looking fine, and are the cleanest, healthiest looking stock seen in several years. Carnation plants, in spite of the hot weather, took hold well and promise a better crop of flowers for the coming winter than we got last season.

PADUCAH, KY.—C. H. Brunson, of C. L. Brunson & Co., is in poor health, and will go south to recuperate.

SAGINAW, MICH.—The William Roethke Floral Co. expects to erect a building on the lot recently purchased by it, corner of Michigan avenue and Adams street, in which a downtown flower store will be established. The company has just completed several large greenhouses, giving it one of the finest establishments in the state.

BALTIMORE.The Market.

Last week was extremely warm, and naturally there was a heavy crop of everything in the cut flower line. Being jubilee week, there was a demand for all kinds of cut flowers and most of the stock was sold at good prices.

American Beauty roses are coming in fine, while carnations are looking better. Roses are still plentiful.

Baltimore florists shared well last week from the jubilee thousands. One of the floats was decorated with American Beauty roses, and the fire hero horse, Goliath, was presented with a collar of carnations and roses. Hundreds of bunches of flowers were in the parades. Mr. Wells, on Broadway, sold 1,000 dahlias in one day and a great many more florists did likewise.

Various Notes.

The Baltimore Gardeners' and Florists' Club held its regular meeting September 10, with a fairly good attendance. The chrysanthemum show was discussed and competition was opened to the private gardeners. W. G. Anderson, of Ruxton, and G. Everly were elected members.

The club sent a few days ago a handsome silver water pitcher to J. G. Harrison & Sons, Berlin, Md. A letter of thanks was received by the secretary from Orlando Harrison, and was read to the members.

R. Vincent was present at the meeting and invited the members to his annual dahlia exhibition. An express train leaves Baltimore Camden station at 11:50 a. m., Mt. Royal at 11:55 a. m., and will stop only at Cowenton, where teams will meet the visitors. It is expected that the Washington club will bring a large crowd, as well as some from New York, Philadelphia and Boston.

Thomas Vincent, one of the members of the firm of R. Vincent, Jr., & Sons, White Marsh, Md., is reported confined to his bed with throat trouble.

Watch Us Grow

ARAUCARIAS, the best decorative plants Nature produces, our specialty.

Every man in business and life, to be successful, must adopt one thing as his specialty and that specialty, of whatever nature it may be, he must guard, study and push to such an extent that it not only benefits himself but he must continue it so every one who seeks his aid, services or his article, which he advertises or practices, will share a slice of his activity and prosperity. I made the importation and cultivation of araucarias a special study in my life. The figures below will show my success in business from the first year: by commencing with an importation of 250 and now, the eleventh year, my importation has grown up to 6,000 (come and see it), the reason being that the araucaria grows yearly more in favor with the plant consuming people all over the country, as a most admired decorative plant for the parlor, bed-room, dining and sitting-rooms, stores and hotels, lawns and porches. The outlook will be of an importation of at least 8,000 to 10,000 in spring of 1907. To secure this vast amount for 1907, I left Hoboken Aug. 15, striking for Belgium, to make contracts for next year. I shall also bring over with me at the same time a large lot of choice Azalea Indica and Palma, etc., for Christmas and Easter forcing. No money will be spared to secure for my customers the cream of the Belgium greenhouses only.

Please note lowest prices for September.
Araucaria Excelsa, 12 to 14 inches high, 5½-in. pots, 3 to 4 tiers, 2 yrs. old, 50c. 14 to 16 inches high 5½ in. pots, 3 to 4 tiers, 2 yrs. old, 60c. 16 to 18 inches high 5½ to 6-in. pots, 4 to 5 tiers, 3 yrs. old, 75c. 18 to 20 inches high, 6-in. pots, 5 to 6 tiers, 4 yrs. old, $1.00. 20 to 24 inches high, 6-in. pots, 5 to 6 tiers, 4 yrs. old, $1.25. 26 to 30 inches high, specimens, 7-in. pots, 6 yrs. old, $2.50 to $3.00.

Araucaria Compacta Robusta, have 1000 of them. Never were they as nice as this year. Plants are as broad as long, from 12 to 20 inches in height, 3 to 4 perfect tiers, 20 to 30 inches across from tip of one tier to the other, 3, 4 and 5 yrs. old. 6 to 7-in. pots, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75 to $2.00, up to $1.00 each.

Araucaria Excelsa Glauca, perfect jewels in shape and size, their beautiful greenish blue tiers give them such a striking appearance, that anyone seeing them must fall in love with them on sight. Plants, 6 to 7-in. pots, 3, 4, 5 perfect tiers, 15 to 25 inches in height, from 15 to 30 inches across, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75, $2.00 to $2.50 each. Please bear in mind that the above mentioned varieties are the cream of Belgium's productions. We have thousands of them and can meet all demands.

Kentia Belmoreana, 6-in. pots, 4-year-old, 5 to 6 leaves, bushy, 30 to 35 inches high, $1.25; 5½ to 6-in. pots, 3-year-old, 5 to 6 leaves, 75c to $1.00 each. These are the sizes entered in the customs house.

All goods must travel at purchaser's risk. Cash with order, please.

"I have several times been consulted by those who would make a beginning in the Florists' business. In each case I have said that the first step is to subscribe for a Trade Paper, and the next to procure a copy of The Florists' Manual."—J. A. VALENTINE, Pres. Park Floral Co., Denver, Colo.

No dry-as-dust botanical classifications, but tells you just how to produce marketable plants and cut flowers in the best and cheapest way.

TELLS you just what you want to know about every plant that there is any money in for a Commercial Florist.

Treats of over 200 subjects and is freely illustrated with fine half-tone engravings.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

It is not often that a really good lot of tree peonies are seen in England, and hardly ever are they met with in Scotland; plenty of collections and plants in quantity for garden decoration and cutting of the herbaceous section are seen, but the tree peonies are sadly neglected, considering what lovely plants they make.

In small gardens the question of the size they grow and the cost of the plants probably prevents them being planted; but this is no drawback to large private establishments, where money and space are no objects. The probable objection is the tenderness of the spring growths; many times a single frost spoils the whole year's bloom. But it is the generally accepted opinion that they are tender that causes them to suffer; they are usually planted in the warmest and most sheltered spot, consequently at the slightest spring warmth they break into growth, with the inevitable result that a later frost injures them. They should be planted in a more exposed position, where they get the benefit of early spring warmth as late as possible, and only slightly protected during the hardest frost and worst east winds. Treated thus they may be bloomed and grown successfully as far north as Edinburgh or even still farther north in Scotland.

My reason for these remarks is that tree peonies will become much more fashionable for use in shrubberies and as lawn ornaments, and large sales and inquiries for plants are reported by our leading nurserymen.

Visitors from America to Europe need not go as far as Holland to see bulbs, especially tulips, growing in patches of many acres. The Hogg & Robertson bulb farm at Dublin, Ireland, has now reached a size and variety of bulbs cultivated such as to render it well worth a visit. Early forcing tulips do especially well, much better even than in Holland. The growth is stronger and taller, and the blooms are one-quarter larger than ordinary Dutch-grown. The soil is sand, almost identical with that met with in Holland, and the moisture is supplied from below as in Holland. This season there are over seven acres of early tulips, over five acres of miscellaneous bulbs, and many acres of all sorts of narcissi.

This is only a beginning; in the course of time, considering the exceptionally high quality of the bulbs produced and the rate at which they grow and propagate, it is pretty certain that Ireland will be a formidable rival of Holland in bulb culture. In all, Hogg & Robertson have nearly fifty acres of land entirely devoted to bulbs.

At the meeting of the Royal Horticultural Society on July 17 A. N. Sutton exhibited a collection of tuber-bearing solanums, including Solanum Commersoni violet, which is being placed upon the market by a French firm. From appearances it seems that the variety is no different from the older Blue Giant.

At the same meeting it was stated that the Mexican Dasylium glaucophyllum was flowering at Inwood, Temple Combe. The rate of growth of the flower stalk during the fortnight before blooming was sixteen feet, or considerably more than half an inch per hour for the whole time. It is supposed to be the only one bloomed in England since 1857, when one bloomed at Kew.

Blue primroses are being talked of and sought for again. The strain of G. F. Wilson put on the market some years ago is said to come true blue. Some of them may, but my experience has been that plants from seed saved from true blue flowers entirely will result in every imaginable color—red, pink, purple, lavender and even yellow and white. The fact that I grew the seed under glass and entirely separated from other colors in primroses does not appear to make any difference, and even if a true blue plant is selected and divided up, the divisions are just as likely to come purple or red, so much so that after experiments I came to the conclusion that the blue color was more the effect of light and shade and different chemical compositions of the soil than anything else. It is a great pity a permanent true blue strain cannot be established. It would be a valuable acquisition to our spring flowers, a blue flower or two in spring being badly needed. It would be a lucky find for the fortunate raiser, and would probably result in a little fortune when placed on the market. J. B.

Greenhouse Heating.

HEATING LETTUCE HOUSE.

I am adding a new house to my plant, 12x90 feet, with 4-foot walls and a 10-foot ridge. The north wall is boarded, south wall of glass to the ground. My boiler-shed adjoins it on the east. I want to grow lettuce, and need 45 to 50 degrees in winter. Our coldest weather is 10 degrees below zero, but it rarely goes below zero. There is a hill to the north, which protects the house some. I want to use 1½-inch pipe, with steam, and no steam trap. This house has no benches.

Can you tell me of anything to repair a leaky house with, without removing the glass. C. F. B.

To heat your house 12x90 feet with low pressure steam, using 1½-inch pipe for returns, it will be necessary to provide a 2-inch flow under the ridge and two manifolds of four pipes each on the side walls, the full length of the house. This makes a 2-inch riser and eight 1½-inch returns, arranged in two coils of four pipes each on the side walls.

The leaky house, if glazed with lapped glass, can be repaired without removing the glass by the use of liquid putty, i. e., putty thinned with boiled oil and applied with a putty bulb. There are several patented materials upon the market as well as several devices for applying same, all of which are quite satisfactory. L. C. C.

PIPING FOR THREE HOUSES.

Will you please tell me how best to arrange the piping to heat three greenhouses running north and south side by side, with 4-foot concrete walls and nine feet ten inches to the ridges? Two of them are each 18x74, solid concrete beds, and the other is 18x52, raised beds. The piping is wanted under the beds in the short house. My boiler has 5-inch flow and 4-inch return openings, and the bottom of the boiler-room is five feet ten inches below the beds in the houses. I want to use 2-inch pipe coils, and want a temperature of 60 degrees. A. S.

Each house in the range can be heated by eleven runs of 2-inch pipe the length of the house. If two pipes in each house are used for flows, the others may be arranged either on the side walls or under the benches as returns. The flows can be carried either on the side walls near the gutters, or under the roof near the purlins or ridge, as preferred. The pipes should be so arranged as to give a little more heat near exposed walls than near protected ones. L. C. C.

HEATING BLOCK OF HOUSES.

Please give us some information and advice regarding heating. We have a sectional hot water boiler, nine sections long, which heats our old range. We are building three even-span, ridge-and-furrow carnation houses in a block, the block being 100 feet long and forty-seven feet wide, seven and one-half feet to gutters, one row of vents to each house, thirty-two inches of glass in sides and same at ends. Would it be best to heat the new houses with water or steam? We are inclined to prefer a

We expect to add more to this range, and wish to install a boiler that would carry at least three more houses similar to the ones now being built. Which would be more economical, steam or water? The boiler that we have does very good work, but requires a great deal of coal, and it is expensive. A built over it, besides the pit is only twenty-two feet long. About what horsepower do we need and what style of piping would be best for carnations in a mild climate? What we want is efficient heat without too much expense.

As fast as old grate bars are burned out many growers are putting in the Martin rocking grate. The call for this grate is largely increased by the fact that the growers who have used it for one or more seasons are almost without exception equipping other boilers with it. The grate costs considerably more than the stationary bars, but is figured to make a decided saving in fuel, and that is what all the growers are after.

S. B. S. & Co.

The three houses can be successfully heated with low pressure steam by using a 2-inch flow under the ridge of each house and five 1 1/4-inch returns, i. e., three 2-inch flow pipes and fifteen 1 1/4-inch returns for the whole plant.

A boiler rated as fifteen horse-power, if provided with 340 square feet of heating surface, will be ample to heat this range of houses and another similar to it. A horizontal tubular boiler eight feet long, thirty-six inches in diameter, with 340 square feet of heating surface, will be large enough for the two banks of houses. Steam is more economical to install, and cheaper fuel can be used, but a fireman must be constantly in attendance.

How much piping is needed for a lean-to on the south of these houses, 12x42, 2-foot wall and 5-foot ridge?

L. C. B.

The house 14x34 should have nine runs of 2-inch pipe to supply the desired heat, or if instead of using a 2-inch flow, which is ample, you desire to use the 3-inch flow, then eight 2-inch pipes in addition will be ample. The piping for the house 14x42 feet should be the same as above stated, as far as size and number of pipes are concerned. The lean-to house 12x42 can be heated by seven lines of 2-inch pipe, one of which can be used as a flow pipe.

used as a throttle valve, one that is set to allow a certain amount of steam to pass into the greenhouse, whether the steam pressure on the boiler is thirty pounds or eighty pounds? J. C.

Yes, there are controlling valves for this purpose. We have one that reduces a pressure of sixty pounds in the boiler to one or more pounds pressure in the heating system. It has answered the purpose admirably. It never has been out of order or cost a penny for repairs in four years. It was recommended to us by the Lake View Rose Gardens, Jamestown, N. Y., who claimed it saves them a third in fuel. It assuredly has many advantages for the florist who heats with steam. The only address I received was the Mason Regulating Valve Co., of Boston, Mass. That is all you need. The size we have is on a 3-inch pipe and cost $45. Where you use the high pressure system, the controlling or regulating valve is indispensable. There are some points about placing it on the system in the second edition of the "Florists' Manual."

With the gravity system of steam heating the controlling valve is not necessary, but the consensus of opinion with those using high pressure steam and the controlling valve is that there is a saving of fuel. Think of one instance alone: It has been a mild day in bleak November; one run of pipe has been sufficient to keep your houses at 55 degrees; at 5 p. m. the wind from the west begins to whistle, a blizzard is on the wing and suddenly a chill blast is on your glass. You do not have to poke up your fires and shovel in fuel. The blizzard is met and defeated in five minutes by a slight turn of the key on your controlling valve, which fills your system with hot, dry steam at from one to ten pounds pressure; and so on throughout the year, a turn of the key turns on or shuts off steam instantly. W. S.

FUEL GAS AND BURNERS.

Will you kindly give us some information about gas for greenhouses? We are paying $2.50 per ton for lump coal. Natural gas will cost us 15 cents per thousand feet. Can we afford to use gas at this price? The company will pipe the gas to the greenhouses in 2-inch pipes. What pressure will we need? We have a forty horse-power tubular boiler. The house is 70x238 feet. What kind of burners will it be best to use? B. & S.

All I can do is to state comparative values. It will be necessary that you decide the case for your conditions. So far as heating power is concerned, a ton of the best bituminous coal is equivalent to about 30,000 cubic feet of gas, or gas at 15 cents per thousand cubic foot is equal to the best coal at $4.50. The cost of firing, removing ashes, etc., must be charged in the coal account to offset the gas-bill.

For a boiler such as you have, about as good an arrangement as can be made for a burner is to place a 2-inch supply pipe in the bottom of the ash pit, all grates having been removed, so that it will lie close in the angle made by the side wall. Place such a pipe on either side. Arrange three openings in each pipe, which will require two tees and an ell on each section. Put nipples in the openings and fit to each a jumbo mixer, i. e., a mixer made for a 2-inch pipe; carry a pipe from the mixer to within

MEDIUM FOR HEATING.

We expect to build another greenhouse 30x60 feet, 4-foot sides and 13-foot ridge. We expect to heat by hot water, using 2-inch flow pipes and 1 1/4-inch returns. How many returns will we have to use to maintain a temperature of 55 degrees when the outside temperature is 10 degrees below zero?

We want to heat two such houses from the same boiler, and can use either hot water or steam. Which would you advise us to use? Which is most economical of fuel?

E. S. M.

If you have only two houses of the dimensions indicated, hot water heat will prove most economical. The size of pipe you are purposing to use is, however, much better adapted to steam than to hot water heating. To heat the house 30x60 feet with hot water, using 2-inch risers and 1 1/4-inch returns, it will be necessary to provide two 2-inch risers and twenty-four 1 1/4-inch return pipes. If 2-inch pipe is used for both flow and return pipes three 2-inch flows and fourteen 2-inch returns can be employed to do the same work. The larger pipe will be more satisfactory for hot water but the cost will be considerably more than that for the smaller pipe.

L. C. C.

A COOL HOUSE.

I have an even-span house 18x60 running east and west on a slope to the south. I want to build a small three-quarter-span house on the north side of the present structure, to be used as a cool house for mums, carnations, lettuce, etc., and to propagate. I plan a house 12x60, with a 3-foot bench on the south side and a ground bed six feet wide on the north side. I have a hot water boiler equal to the requirements of both houses. How would you pipe?

J. W. G.

Your idea can be worked out in a satisfactory manner, but it will be necessary to provide good drainage along the north side of the house, so as to keep the solid bed along the north wall warm and dry. To accomplish this it will be wise to make an excavation that will provide drainage at least eighteen inches below the surface of the solid bed. This should have tile or stone in it so as to care for all moisture that may find its way down the side of the north wall. Surface drains can also be provided as an additional safeguard to the house.

The heating for the house can be arranged as follows: The elevated bench, which will be used as the propagating bed, will require bottom heat, and can be piped by using a flow and two returns under the elevated bench, and a flow and three returns on the north wall. This is planned for 2-inch pipe.

The Market.

Our market is getting better with every week. The summer people are coming home, the theaters are opening, and in fact everything is now shaping itself for what is certain to be a busy autumn. Stock of all kinds is coming of much better quality and it helps business wonderfully, as certainly we have been obliged to work with the poorest kind of flowers all summer. The last two weeks have been busy ones as regards funeral work. The unveiling of the McKinley monument by Mrs. Nicholas Longworth brought many distinguished men and women to Columbus and the entertainments in honor of all these guests made a goodly number of orders for our florists.

Various Notes.

A regular meeting of the club was held September 11, with Vice-President Curry in the chair. The special business was a discussion of the report of the committee on a chrysanthemum show. This committee, consisting of Messrs. Faxon, Woodrow, Stephens, Knopf and McKellar, advised that arrangements be made for a show for November, 1907, and it was so voted by the club.

Extensive repairs, including the purchase of two sixty horse-power boilers, are being arranged for by the Franklin park commissioners. A fund of $7,000 was recently appropriated by the city for these purposes.

Graff Bros. have been having special sales of asters and McKinley carnations the past week and report returns far ahead of their expectations.

More orders than in any previous year have recently been placed for various varieties of evergreens. It is very pleasing to the craft that this desirable class of stock is getting a foothold here.

The question of a public flower market is again being agitated by some of

The Gem Support

THE GEM SUPPORT is made of galvanized wire, consisting of one stake and two rings which can be raised or lowered according to the needs of the user, or when not in use can be folded flat without the rings being removed from the stake, and cannot tangle. Takes very little space when folded. Neat, durable and practical. Received the highest award of merit as the best support to date at the National Convention, Dayton, Ohio.

THE TEST OF DURABILITY

Durability in greenhouse material is of first importance. It is expensive and tiresome to be constantly rebuilding and repairing—trying to patch up houses built of poor material.

If you want lasting houses get material that stands the test. Our cypress material will stand the most critical examination or comparison. "Time waits for no man"—send for catalogue and estimate today.

ON THE LOOKOUT

SIMPLEST SYSTEM

The florist is a progressive chap—wants new things—things that give him an advantage over the man without them or makes competition possible with the man with them. But there are a few time-tried things that are so simple, so good, so sure, it costs you money and experience to change. Our ventilating apparatus is one of these things—no criss-cross levers—no chains or cables—just the gear and arm principle. Easy to put up—easy to operate.

THE MEN

WE MEET

JOHN H. SMALL, SR.

John H. Small, Sr., the pioneer floral decorator of Washington, D. C., was born at Watford, England, in 1826. He inherited horticultural tastes from both his father's and mother's parents. His paternal grandfather was the owner of a nursery at Colnbrook, Eng., and leased for ten years Cleveidin, the present home of W. W. Astor, on part of which he conducted a nursery, in connection with his business at Colnbrook. Mr. Small's maternal grandfather was a Welsh gardener, an authority in his day, and it is related that he was often consulted by the first Duchess of Marlborough while planning the gardens for her famous Blenheim.

John H. Small, Sr., received his training both with his grandfather and at Frogmore, Windsor. While at Frogmore he saw much of the early married life of Queen Victoria and the early childhood of the present king of England. He has also vivid recollections of the Duke of Wellington, hero of Waterloo, as he rode to and from Windsor.

Mr. Small came to America in 1848, with the intention of making landscape gardening, for which he had been trained at Frogmore, his life work. At Philadelphia he learned that a Mr. Linthicum, of Georgetown, now a part of Washington, wished to secure the services of a landscape gardener. He secured the position and carried on for his employer a thriving business in Georgetown until 1854, when he went into business for himself.

As his sons, Charles A. Small and John H. Small, Jr., grew up, they were carefully trained in their father's business, the name of J. H. Small & Sons being now a guarantee of fine decorating.

The fact that the members of this firm know the business literally from the ground up probably accounts in great measure for their success as designers and decorators. Enterprising and resourceful as they are, it all rests on the solid foundation of knowledge of the fundamental principles of plant culture.

Many years ago, antedating the civil war, Lord Lyons was British minister at Washington. He was a lavish entertainer, and had imported wax flowers and fruits from Paris for table decorations. Mr. Small persuaded him to give up the waxwork for natural flowers, which he furnished at a financial loss to himself for the time being, but in thus turning the tide of fashion to natural flowers he conferred a great boon on American horticulture.

The efforts of this firm have always been and are now exerted toward elevating the business, a proof being that they use the best obtainable stock. From decorations for the festivities attending the inauguration of presidents on through a long list of fashionable wedding dinners and other occasions, their achievements have been numerous and notable. With advancing years the elder Mr. Small has gradually relinquished active participation in business, and his son, J. H. Small, Jr., is the able manager of the Washington store, C. A. Small performing similar duties in New York.

On his beautiful estate in the suburbs of Washington, J. H. Small, Sr., and his devoted wife are spending their declining years, and though they have not entirely escaped the ills incident to old age, they are cheerful and happy.

PEONIES FOR FORCING.

I wish to grow some peonies, both herbaceous and Moutan, to offer for sale in the spring and early summer of 1908 in pots, and also for forcing the them plunged continuously outside. Would Rubra superba be a good variety for the purpose? J. H. U.

Wm. A. Peterson says that he does not consider it practicable to force peonies for bloom before February 1. The plants should be lifted in October and placed in a coldframe, where they will be accessible when the time arrives for forcing. After the plants are started under glass a temperature of from 55 to 60 degrees should be maintained as uniformly as possible. The plants should be fed liberally with liquid manure. It takes about eight weeks to develop flowers. To secure the best blooms remove the lateral buds as soon as they are formed. The plants must have two years' rest before they can be forced again.

The above, from a first rate authority, covers the ground and we would not assume to improve on it. It is not quite clear what subscriber wants to do. I take it he wants to flower the herbaceous peonies and then sell the plants. If he wants to have plants in pots to sell to previous winter. I wish to know how to prepare the plants, what size pots to use, the best kind of soil and fertilizer to use, and whether or no I could keep his customers in the month of May there is no use growing them in pots. A division of the plants is all that is needed. If forcing for the cut flower is the prinincipal object then the whole stool should be lifted, not the largest clump you have, rather the moderate size, but sufficiently large and well established that every dormant bud will send up a flowering stem.

The size of pots will depend entirely on the size of the clump of roots. Some home-made, rough boxes would be much cheaper than pots and answer the purpose better. As for soil, that is of little consequence, providing you add to it a fourth of animal manure. If extra fine flowers are expected the feeding with liquid manure, as Mr. Peterson recommends, will be of benefit. The time it takes to develop flowers will depend on the temperature. Instead of eight weeks I would prefer to allow ten weeks.

The Moutan or tree peony is quite another proposition. If you have a number of these beautiful plants, branched and set with strong buds, they will force well and make beautiful decorative plants, but should command a large price. Instead of sacrificing my own plants, I would buy from some importing house European plants specially prepared for forcing. We have done this several times and always found the price large and the plant small. In our large cities, where price is of little moment, if the eye and taste are satisfied, really fine plants of the tree peony would sell well, but in most localities they would never pay. If you want to supply your local customers with tree peonies, then get a supply from a peony specialist. As you should be aware, the Moutan peony has no roots of its own and cannot be increased with ease, because it is grafted on roots of the Chinese species.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

The Cabbage Worm.

A feature of greenhouse work that tests the energy and industry of the gardener, equal if not superior to any of his other duties, is the incessant fight against the multitude and apparently ever-increasing army of enemies in the shape of insects, worms, fungus, bacteria, etc. At present the larva of the yellow butterfly, known as the cabbage-worm, is most destructive to the young mignonette sown the end of July, which is now growing rapidly. This worm is so identically the color of the foliage on which it feeds that to trust to hand-picking is out of the question. Powdered hellebore is a sure remedy. It should have been applied two or three weeks earlier, but the worm is likely to be troublesome for some time, or until we get a sharp frost. It should be dusted on the plants when the leaves are dry and do not spray the plants for a few days or you may accumulate too much hellebore in one spot, and then it would be injurious. It is best applied with a powder blower, a small hand bellows used for dusting insect powder and sold by all druggists. You will only be troubled with these green worms for a few weeks longer, but great damage can be done in a few days. These creatures can, I think devour fifty times their own weight in twenty-four hours.

Thrips.

Another pest just now troublesome, and much more difficult to destroy than the worm on our mignonette, is thrips. It has long been known as a scourge to American Beauty and other roses, but it is only of late years that it has troubled carnations. Thrips seems particularly partial to the Lawson carnation and its varieties. I am aware that some men of large experience have recommended a spray of nicotine, yet I think a fumigation of cayenne pepper is better, because these minute but lively insects so bury themselves in the thick folds of the petals that a liquid spray would scarcely reach them. Especially is this the case with the closely folded petals of the rose buds. By the crumpled up and malformed shape of the bud their presence is easily detected on a rose, but not so readily on a carnation. When you see the expanded flower of a Lawson with its largest petals dotted with white specks you can be sure you have thrips in the house. If left alone you will have few perfect flowers. Cayenne pepper is their destroyer. For a house 20x100 we use three common bricks heated red-hot and as quickly as possible spread on each brick the contents of a 2½-inch pot of the pepper. See that you get fresh pepper, not that which has been on the shelf of the village store for several years.

We never have noticed any ill effects on the foliage of any plant from the fumes of the pepper, and three doses of it in one week will make the thrips very sick. Don't stay in the house too long yourself or it will make your eyes blink.

Winter-Flowering Peas.

In looking through the neat little pamphlet sent out by A. C. Zvolanek, "Culture and History of Winter-Flowering Sweet Peas," I see Mr. Zvolanek says a green worm similar to the cabbage-worm troubles them. These must be daily looked for and picked off. Greenfly also is troublesome to the sweet peas. Frequent light fumigations with tobacco dust will hold it in check, or a spraying with a weak solution of nicotine. It is best applied with a knapsack air pressure sprayer, which every florist should have on his place, because it is such a splendid apparatus for spraying the nicotine solution on the chrysanthemums for black-fly.

The winter-flowering peas, Christmas Pink and Florence Denzer, white, sown August 20 in the beds where they are to flower, are now up seven or eight inches and should have some support at once. A wire stretched across the surface of the bed close to each row of plants, and a corresponding wire six or seven feet above the bed is the first thing to arrange. From the bottom to the top wire attach two strings a few inches apart at each hill of plants. The best string for this purpose is binding twine, used by the farmers to bind their sheaves of wheat. It is coarse, strong, and cheap.

Keep your peas well supplied with water. Allow no check in their growth. When fire is necessary, 47 degrees or 48 degrees is high enough for night temperature, and always give plenty of ventilation. Keep this treatment up, and if your house is light and you get full sunshine, you will pick peas of these varieties in November.

Cyclamen.

Two weeks ago I wrote of what I considered a new method of culture of that important winter plant, the cyclamen. It was something entirely new to me, and I fancy it will be to some others. Since I said sow the seeds one inch apart, I have, through the courtesy of G. A. Robinson, of Montreal, received from him his treatment of these plants from seed-sowing to flowering, which I hope with much pleasure to give to the readers of the REVIEW. If I gave it to you all today you might forget it. So I propose to refer to the method whenever there is an essential operation needed. Sufficient is it to say today that the seed sown one inch apart on September 1 can remain in the flats undisturbed until about the first part of March. Keep the seedlings in about 55 degrees at night on a light bench, and during winter the more sun they get the better. Mr. Robinson says "never let them draw up weak; a lanky cyclamen at any part of its existence is only fit for the dump pile." WILLIAM SCOTT.

THE RECORD AURATUM.

Every now and then an unusually floriferous auratum lily attracts attention. Such a one recently illustrated in the REVIEW brought from Ross Bros. Co., Worcester, Mass., the photograph reproduced in this issue and the following comment:

"This auratum lily we had photographed two years ago. We have forgotten the exact number of flowers on it, but think it was about eighty, and all, with the exception of two buds, were opened at one time; those buds were perfect and opened later. The dimension of the head was about fifteen to eighteen inches and made one complete ball without a break. We think this was without any doubt the most magnificent auratum lily ever seen in this country and it was raised in an out of the way place without any care whatever."

PACKING CUT FLOWERS.

[A paper by H. G. Mulliss, packer for the Dale Estate, Brampton, Ont., read before the Canadian Horticultural Association at Guelph, August 30, 1906.]

Roses.

In preparing stock for shipment, roses ought to be cut before the sun is on them in the morning and placed in water as soon as possible, and then put in a cool place, cellar preferred, and left there to harden up, which will take from six to twelve hours. Then the stock will be in perfect shape for shipping.

In packing roses, use boxes made of wood, give them a lining of paper from two to six thicknesses, according to the weather, and then place a small roll of wadding in front on the bottom of the box, and on that, one sheet of wax or oiled paper about four inches wide, and as long as the box is wide.

Next, put in the roses. Put one layer across the box, and on it one sheet of wax paper, and on the stems, close up to the buds of the first row, put the second row, and then place a third on top of the second, and a fourth on top of the third, and so on until you have the roses level with the top of the box.

Then fasten them so that they will not shift forward in the box. To do this, take a stick $\frac{1}{2} \times \frac{1}{2}$ inches and as long as the box is wide. Put a small wire nail in each end, projecting out from an eighth to a quarter of an inch, and fasten with a blind staple to keep the nail in place. In putting this cleat in the box, put the nail through one side of the box and then spring the box open and spring the stick down tight enough to hold the stems firmly in the box; and then let the box spring back to place. This will hold the stems of the flowers firmly in position.

If the box is not full to the back, it is a nice place to put in some green, asparagus or smilax, or even violets or lily of the valley, or some other small flowers that you may have at the time.

Carnations.

Carnations may be packed in somewhat the same way as roses, only we lay them in in bunches, not singly as in the case of roses. I believe carnations should be packed more carefully than they usually are. Many growers think that carnations will stand rough treatment, and on that assumption they are thrown into the boxes without the least thought of injury, and, when the retailer lays a complaint, the grower wonders why the stock did not arrive at its destination in good condition.

In the summer-time, it is a practice among growers to put a small piece of ice in the back of each box to keep the stock moist. It is not wise to use too much ice. I had an experience with a box of carnations shipped to Regina. The man who ordered the goods complained of stock spoiling with dampness; so I sent one box on trial, without the least moisture of any description, and received word that the box arrived all right. When it was opened only a few spots of moisture on the wax paper were found. As it then was 10 p. m., the buyer thought it wise to leave the flowers in the box until morning. When he took them out the next morning there was not the least bit of moisture of any kind. He is of the opinion that they would have traveled back again in as good condition as when they left. If carnations will travel four days without ice, why do they need ice when traveling not one-eighth the distance?

Through the winter months, there is a good deal of complaint, among growers, of carnations going to sleep. Quite a lot of this is due to the grower letting his stock get too dry on the benches. If growers would watch their watering a little more closely, there would not be so many sleepy carnations through the country.

Lilies.

Mignonette will travel well if picked for about twelve hours before shipment. It will then stand a long trip. Harrisii and longiflorum can be shipped to advantage on the plant. I have shipped them for three and four-day trips by first making a box five feet long, seventeen inches wide and ten inches deep, out of $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch lumber. Line the box with paper. Take the plant and knock the pot off, wrap the soil and roots in paper, and then lay it down flat in the bottom of the box. The box will hold four plants across. First put one row in each end of the box, then another row directly in front. This will make sixteen plants on the bottom of the box. Then fasten a cleat across the front rows and wrap the stems well, in the center of the box, with wadding. Put another four rows on top of the first, making thirty-two plants in the box, or about one hundred and twenty-five blooms. If the flowers are well wrapped they will travel without the least bit of injury. Should the retailer want the pots, they can be packed in boxes and shipped separately. Very few retailers will pay express charges on pots, as it is too expensive.

Chrysanthemums.

Chrysanthemums should be packed in wooden boxes by first putting a row across the box, and then another on top, if the box is deep enough to warrant it.

The Record in Auratums.

If not, let the box go with one single layer, heads all one way, which would mean only about thirty to fifty blooms. Chrysanthemums will not stand too much pressure. Do not place too many rows on top of each other, as it presses the flowers out of place. Not only that, but it bends and breaks the petals and therefore destroys the bloom for first-class use by causing it to turn brown. It must then be used in cheap work, such as designs or sprays that do not call for first-class stock. Chrysanthemums are bulky and long-stemmed, and therefore call for a long box, but not necessarily deep or wide. This refers to first-class stock, such as will sell at from 10 cents to 20 cents wholesale.

Smaller stock can be packed about the same as asters. Put them in one at a time and fill the boxes full. By doing this, they will travel in good condition, but not when two or three inches above the box, so that they have to be pressed down to get the lid on.

Handles on Boxes.

Our boxes are handled about one-third from the end, and the short end is the end to which the roses are headed. This is to keep the roses always higher than their stems in case the cleat should move or the boxes be thrown. If the expressman should throw the boxes in the car, the back will strike the floor first, and therefore not injure the stock.

EARLY VARIETIES.

Already the different large centers are chronicling the arrival of the advance guard of chrysanthemums in daily increasing numbers. This is several weeks earlier than usual, and, while it is interesting as showing what can be done if occasion requires, I doubt if the financial returns will be high enough to permit any grower to retire from business.

The chrysanthemum is associated in the minds of most flower buyers with nippy, crisp weather, when frost has destroyed the outside stock, and while there is a limited demand for anything that is a novelty, there cannot be said to be any real call for chrysanthemums much before the first week in October. The flower market in most cities at the present time is overstocked with asters, dahlias and other good outdoor stock, and to force the mum upon a market that has no snap to it, is only adding to the woes of the much abused wholesaler. One correspondent writes me that he has already sold off his flowers of Grunewald and is now busy getting the space ready for sweet peas. Other varieties seen are Marquis de Montmort, Fitzwygram and Monrovia, the last named being probably the best seller, as it is large and of good color.

Seasonable Work.

Work in the houses generally is sufficient to keep one busy. Side shoots and suckers are being produced in quantities since the buds were taken, and need almost daily attention. Now is the time to clean out the fly because it is impossible to smoke the houses when the flowers are nearly developed. Most buds, and particularly the crown buds, have more or less black fly in them, and before the bud shows color, a dusting with tobacco dust will clean them out. In the case of crown buds which have so many overlapping folds, the fly seems to crawl inside and is almost immune to tobacco smoke, but the tobacco dust will smother them, and that without the least injury to the bud.

As soon as the buds have broken open their husky covering and one can begin to see the tiny petals, overhead spraying should be discontinued as the water is apt to run into the center of the buds, and laying there will cause it to rot. I do not hesitate to say that many growers who will tell you that the early bud is no good, and will not develop with them, have unwittingly suffered in this manner. The drip from a ventilator, caused by night dews, has often caused a serious loss in the row of plants immediately beneath it, and which has not been noticed until the bud failed to expand, when investigation showed that the center had rotted out of the bud. The night dews perhaps do not affect a large portion of the country, but along the eastern seaboard they cause the mum grower much loss during September and October, often rotting the finest flowers after they are nearly developed.

Many varieties are showing color, and in a short time the chrysanthemum season will be in full swing. Pacific, Polly Rose, Lady Harriet, October Sunshine, Alice Byron, and Beatrice May are all pushing vigorously and will soon join the procession into the flower stores.

As the different varieties show color, shut off the feeding or the flower will be soft and easily bruised, and in some extreme cases will damp and rot away. The later varieties that have the buds still small and green, will be greatly benefited by a weekly watering with liquid fertilizer made from either animal or chemical manure.

In using chemicals, I always put it in at the rate of a 4-inch pot to fifty gallons of water, and at that proportion I have seen nothing but beneficial results. The chemicals from which I get the best returns are sulphate of ammonia and nitrate of potash. Either of these alternated with sheep or cow manure will give excellent results.

Committee on Seedlings.

President Duckham has announced the committees to examine seedlings and sports on the dates as follows: October 6, 13, 20 and 27; November 3, 10, 17 and 24, 1906.

Exhibits to receive attention from the committees must in all cases be prepaid to destination, and the entry fee of $2 should be forwarded to the secretary not later than Tuesday of the week preceding examination, or may accompany the blooms. Special attention is called to the rule requiring that sports to receive a certificate must pass three committees.

New York.—Eugene Dailedouze, chairman, 55 and 57 West Twenty-sixth street, New York City; Thomas Head, Wm. Turner. Ship flowers to 55 and 57 West Twenty-sixth street, New York Philadelphia, Pa.—A. B. Cartledge, chairman, 1514 Chestnut street; John Westcott, Wm. K. Harris.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Importance of Good Compost.

I had intended this week to remind you of getting in your carnation soil for next season, but Mr. Scott gave you such a good article on that subject in last week's issue that there is very little more I could say except Amen. What he says is to the point and true, and I can heartily indorse every word of it. Let me urge you again to get your soil in this fall before bad weather begins. I take it for granted that you belong to that class of growers who believe in doing everything in good time, and getting their plants housed early enough to be profitable early in the season. If, on the other hand, you belong to that class of growers who never house their carnations until everybody else begins cutting blooms, then you had better let the soil go until next summer when you want to use it. You wouldn't feel right to have it piled up so long; it would worry you.

Disease in Lawson.

A number of cases of the new disease which has been attacking Mrs. Lawson in some sections have come under my notice recently, and I have been asked by one grower, to give what I would consider the best method of dealing with the trouble. Now, to start with, I must state that I have had no personal experience with this disease, and, therefore, can give only my impressions as derived from the experience of others as they have been given me from time to time. I have been much interested in the subject from the start and had concluded some time ago how I would proceed against it in case it appeared on our place.

In most instances it seems to come with a heavy, saturating rain which has a tendency to make the growth soft. Mrs. Lawson, being a rather fleshy-leaved variety, is affected quickly in that way and naturally would be one of the first to be attacked.

That the disease is a fungus and belongs to the same class as the common leaf spot and others, I have no doubt, and it must be met with much the same remedies. The time of its appearance, however, necessitates a change in the method of eradication from the one that was followed in most of the cases coming under my notice. The tendency on the part of the growers seems to have been to lift the plants, clean them off, and plant inside where conditions are supposed to be under control at all times. This plan has invariably miscarried, and I will endeavor to show you why. The trouble was started by an excess of moisture, both at the roots, and in the atmosphere. The latter started the fungus into activity, while the former weakened the plant by making it soft and unable to fight off the disease. When the plants are housed, the same condition in the atmosphere is maintained, while the plant is further weakened by being transplanted. The plant does not take hold readily as a healthy one would and the disease has all the more chance to get in its work, growing weaker as the disease gets stronger, until it succumbs entirely.

Now, I assert that, inasmuch as it is necessary to keep the atmosphere heavily charged with moisture for several days after planting in the carnations, it is folly to house any plants that show much if any of the leaf spot diseases. The conditions are too highly favorable to their development. The proper method, in my opinion, is to get rid of the disease before housing the plants. Then they will be in better condition to recover quickly from the disturbance, and the disease will not be present to ravage the plants while they are weak.

The task of cleaning off the plants while they are growing in the field is, of course, a laborious one, but it will pay to do it when so much is at stake. After that, spraying with formaline or Bordeaux mixture, or dusting with lime and sulphur or grape dust can be done just as well as it can be done in the house. These remedies can not be applied inside until the plants have resumed growth, which stage was never reached by those I have noticed. Outside you have the full sun and fresh air to aid you in drying. It seems to me that if this plan is followed, there should be no great amount of trouble in eradicating disease wherever it makes its appearance. A. F. J. BAUR.

SPRAYING FOR ANTS.

I have been spraying my plants once every week for the last month with a pressure of thirty to thirty-five pounds through a hose pierced with a small needle, and find red spider increasing. Is this sufficient pressure and often enough to destroy them? The stock was planted in the house August 4, in four inches of fresh soil, with about one inch of rotted manure at the bottom. They are growing spindly. Would a top-dressing of equal parts, well-rotted horse and cow manure be desirable to use now, and how much to a row on a bench four feet eight inches wide? F. O. P.

A nozzle such as you describe will not allow enough volume of water to pass through it to produce a sharp, cutting spray such as is needed to dislodge red spider. The best nozzle to fight red spider with, is a plain coupling at the end of the hose, and your index finger. Turn on the water full force if your pressure is not over thirty-five pounds, and then shoot it against the plants in a spray as hard as possible. At this time of the year, when the days are bright and evaporation is so rapid, you need have no fear of wetting the soil too much when syringing, even if you spray every day. You will have to water some, besides.

In the winter, when the days are short and dark, you must be more careful about the volume of water you use. Then you must turn on just enough to make a strong, cutting spray. You should bend every effort toward getting rid of this pest before the middle of next month, else they are liable to be with you the rest of the season. You cannot fight them after that as you can now. Syringe every bright day until you are rid of them. Once a week is not enough.

A pound of any pure soap, shaved into a gallon of boiling water, and when cooled diluted in four gallons of clear water, will help you to get rid of them. Spray this on the plants early in the morning of a bright day, and before noon wash it off with the hose. If conditions are any way near what they should be, your plants ought not be making a spindly growth at this time. I am inclined to think that the trouble lies not in a lack of food in the soil. During these early fall months that ought to result in nothing more serious than a less vigorous growth than is desirable.

Have you removed all the shade from the glass? If not, then do so at once and you will soon see a difference. Perhaps the ventilation has been insufficient, too. Crowd on all the air you can during the day, and all that you consider safe at night. We lower our ventilators about half way in the evening, to guard against sudden windstorms during the night. If you have a night man, this need not be done, and the plants will be the better for it. A mulch such as you suggest will do no harm, and if it had been applied September 1, it might have done much good in keeping the moisture in the soil more even. Put it on about half an inch thick. A. F. J. BAUR.

ADVERTISING METHODS.

In looking over the advertisements of carnation plants in the REVIEW, I notice a tendency on the part of many to abbreviate considerably more than should be done. In fact, in some cases it is done so much that it might even cause confusion. It seems to me that in all cases the full name of the variety should be given; then you are sure what you are buying, in case you wish to order from the list given.

For instance, we find simply Lawson, when I suppose Mrs. Thomas W. Lawson is meant. That brings to mind a conversation which we had one day recently with a young grower who is not so well posted on varieties as some of us. He was asking about various varieties and among others asked, "How about Pink Lawson?" Now, we knew that he had been growing Mrs. Thomas W. Lawson two years at least, and of course told him so, whereupon he said he had seen it advertised and thought it must be a lighter sport. It is this class of readers who are apt to become confused. Then we find simply Roosevelt, with no clue as to whether it means Governor Roosevelt or Mrs. Theo. Roosevelt. In any instances that have come under my notice, I know it is not a case of ignorance of the proper full names, but simply an attempt to abbreviate. Some may think it looks snappy in an ad, but I for one cannot see it that way. True enough, an ad that is brief and snappy and that says a lot in a few words is worthy of commendation, but it should not be pruned and curtailed at the wrong places. It should at least be explicit enough so that no mistake can be made as to what is meant. A. F. J. BAUR.

PROPAGATING CANNAS.

Kindly let me know which would be best to increase my stock of cannas over winter, to plant the whole clump as dug from the field in solid beds, or to divide them and start them in flats. T. T.

If you do not lift your cannas till the parts. The ordinary flat is not deep enough. Boxes six inches deep will do. In this northern climate we treat the canna as if it were an herbaceous plant, letting the roots become perfectly dry from October to March. It is not herbaceous in its native clime. That is demonstrated by the way it will, when grown in pots, go on growing and flowering throughout the winter in a warm greenhouse. In case you divide the roots, don't be too free with water. Wait till you are sure they are making roots in the new soil; then you can water freely. W. S.

ASPIDISTRAS.

Varieties.

The lily family, or liliacæ, as it is termed by the botanists, is an extensive one, there being more than 2,500 species of plants included under that heading. The majority of these plants are herbaceous in habit, and in that particular the subject of this article differs from the common habit of the other members of the lily family, for the aspidistras are evergreen, and usually hold their foliage for several years.

Among the hardiest of decorative foliage plants, the aspidistras are deservedly popular, and few collections of plants are without some representative from this genus, either of the green-leaved type, or one of the variegated forms. The original aspidistra was the short-leaved and green-foliaged species, A. lurida, and was introduced from China in 1822. This species seldom grows more than eighteen inches high, while the taller growing species, A. elatior, and its variegated form, the latter being the common variegated aspidistra of commerce, were introduced from Japan several years later, probably about 1835. The illustration herewith is from a photograph of a specimen plant shown at the Dayton convention by Frank Huntsman, of Cincinnati.

A third species, A. punctata, is also occasionally seen in plant collections, this being also a Chinese introduction. It is of less value than the others, being comparatively short in growth, and having its leaves spotted with an unhealthy looking yellow variegation.

Cultural Methods.

The culture of aspidistras is quite an easy proposition, any reasonably good soil and an abundance of water being the essentials in the case, while they are by no means critical in the matters of temperature and shade. If long leaves and a rapid growth are desired, then these plants may be plunged or planted out in a hotbed and given a partial shading from the summer sun. If short and tough foliage, and stocky plants of the build that is useful for window boxes, are the aim of the grower, then the aspidistra should be given full sunshine, a rather heavy soil, well enriched with cow manure and a sprinkling of bone dust, and should not be allowed to suffer from lack of water throughout the growing season.

During the winter but little growth is made by these plants, and a night temperature of 50 degrees is quite high enough to keep them in good condition. The plan of growth of the aspidistras being by means of underground stems, the common method of propagation is by division. This operation is preferably performed in the spring, thus al-number of instances the "Mrs." or "The" are left off, all of which, as I say, should be added when they belong there. We find in one issue Mrs. E. A. Nelson quoted as E. A. Nelson in one place, and in another simply Nelson. Still another might write it Mrs. Nelson, which would be better than the other two. But why not write it Mrs. E. A. Nelson, as it should be? In all of these frost has injured the tops, then you should cut down the stems to within a foot of the ground, and if the clump of roots is only of moderate size, remove to a bench with a depth of six inches of soil, and young growths will continue to start, which can be removed with a small piece of the old root attached. If they are large clumps, it would be more convenient to divide them into three or four lowing the divisions to grow into form during the summer.

It is a good plan to wash out the roots of the plants that are to be divided, as the stems may then be separated with less injury to the roots. In dividing old and long-established plants, there will frequently be found old pieces of the underground stems with no leaves attached, and these also have some value, from the fact that they may be cut into short sections (about one inch will do), and these pieces planted in flats of sandy soil, then covered with a layer of sand, given a good watering and placed in a warm greenhouse. In the course of a few weeks many of these sections of stem will start away from long dormant eyes, ultimately producing useful young stock.

Hardiness and Length of Life.

The aspidistras are nearly hardy, bearing a temperature several degrees below freezing without injury, if the plants have been grown cool, while exposure to dust, draughts, and other disadvantages of a furnace-heated dwelling have but little effect upon them.

As an example of their longevity as house plants, a specimen in the possession of a neighbor of the writer may be cited, this plant being grown in an iron vase, used as a lawn ornament in summer, and standing near a sitting-room window during the winter. After about twenty years of such treatment it is more flourishing than ever, and is a perfect mass of healthy leaves. It is a plant of similar build, but much larger than the attractive specimen pictured upon the opposite page, and also a plant of A. elatior.

The flowers of the aspidistras seldom attract much attention. Their dull purple color, and the fact that they scarcely protrude above the soil, hides them from the less observant, but they are decidedly singular in appearance and quite worthy of closer examination.

WINDOW GLASS.

Although Saturday, September 15, officially marked the opening of the season of 1906-07 in the window glass making industry, there was no general resumption. It is generally admitted that the window glass industry is in a most critical condition. The trouble appears to be that the manufacturers and the jobbers are distrustful of each other. It is apparently certain that no new glass will be put on the market before next month, and perhaps not before October 15 or November 1.

MIGNONETTE IN POTS.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of three pots of mignonette made just before Easter a few years ago. You might merely say that when you meet with success why deviate from the method that gained success, but these mignonettes were not the all-round success that we expected. The whole hatch of about 200 was fine. The 2-foot rule suspended over the center one will give the size better than any description. They were not tied out in the least. The string that encircled them was merely cut, allowing them to fall loosely apart.

They were handsome, but they did not appeal to the many, as we had to ask $1.50 to $2.50 each. The people of most refined taste wanted them, but that class is far outnumbered by those who want a showy plant, and we had about fifty left. These are not a total loss, as there is a dollar's worth of flowers or more on each.

Why I do not call them an unqualified success is because they were too large. The plants pictured were sown in a 5-inch pot early in August and several plants thinned out to the three strongest. We intended to flower them in that pot, but they grew so strongly that we had to shift them in November into 7 and 8-inch. The foliage became too ripe. It was not yellow, but lacked that fresh, green appearance, which is the beauty of any plant. The reason for this was that the seed was sown too early, and the roots had become exhausted, and, promising to be too early, we removed them to a house where they were exposed almost to a frost.

We have since improved on that. Instead of early in August, sow the seeds at the end of October. The soil should be a slightly heavy loam enriched with a fourth of animal manure, and should be quite firmly packed into a 5-inch pot. Two inches of rather fresh cow manure in the bottom of the pot will help to give vigor to the plants at flowering time.

Sow a pinch of seeds near the edge of the pot at three equally divided distances. Let the plants become two inches high before you select the strongest and most vigorous plant of each little group and pull out the others. For the next three months a night temperature of 40 degrees will be sufficient. With this temperature and the fullest light the plants will be stout and robust.

When three inches above the soil the little plants should be pinched or stopped. You will then have three or four shoots to make flower spikes, in place of one. After the turn of the year, with increased sunlight the plants will grow faster and the bloom will begin to develop, but don't increase the night temperature, or at least not more than 5 degrees. If there is any sign of exhaustion, use weak liquid manure. But there won't be any exhaustion if the plants have been kept cool, making a slow growth during winter.

Stakes to support the flowering stems of any plant are always a detriment to its attractiveness. So three slender wooden stakes encircled by a strand of silkline is all that is required. Mignonette is not an important Easter plant, but plants of moderate size appeal to many customers of refined taste as a dainty remembrance. These plants have cost little for feed, yet they have occupied the benches at least six months, and should not be sold for less than a dollar each. The principal thing to observe is a cool house, the fullest light and plenty of fresh air. W. S.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Department of Plant Registration.

Central Park Nursery, Topeka, Kan., submits for registration the following cannas:

Sunburst, a seedling of Souvenir de Antoine Crozy, identical in foliage and habit with its parent; bloom differs in that there is no yellow edging, but large yellow blotches on the under side; the flower is large, bright crimson in color, and truss is rigidly upright.

Topeka, a seedling of Charles Henderson, foliage very heavy and glaucous, habit extremely sturdy, compact and robust; bloom larger than Henderson, color rich crimson with distinct bright yellow shading along the lower edge of staminodia.

STARTING CUCUMBER SEEDS.

In the starting of cucumbers, it is well first to make sure that the seed is good. The age of it, unless it has been saved at home, is not easily determined. The only way to make sure is to try a few and learn their germinating qualities before making extensive plantings. With home-saved seed, or seed that is not too old, the only thing to find out is whether or not the seed is good and full. It often happens that a seed may look all right, but on pressing between the finger and thumb, it will be found to be but an empty shell. As they have to be handled singly anyway, at planting it is quite an easy matter to press the seed sufficiently, before inserting in the soil, to make sure that it is full and firm.

The seed should be inserted in the soil with the thin or wedge-shaped end down, not the full, pointed end. This puts it in such a position that the root which is first emitted after germination has taken place, strikes straight down into the soil. The soil used for planting the seeds should be moist enough to stand for a few days without water, but must not be too wet. We use 2-inch pots, putting two seeds in each, and try to have the soil in such a condition that water does not need to be applied until the seeds are well started. We plunge the pots into damp sand in a propagating case supplied with bottom heat and keep the case rather close for a day or two, which prevents evaporation, and does away with the necessity of applying water directly to the soil, thus eliminating the danger of rotting the seed before it has had a chance to start. Where water is applied, it must be used judiciously until the plants have gained sufficient strength to use it up. The trouble known as stem-rot often has its beginning at an earlier stage of the plant's growth than many growers think, and is no doubt often caused by careless watering, while the plants are yet in their infancy.

When two plants come up in the pot, the weaker should be pulled as soon as distinguishable, in order to give room to the stronger. One in a pot is enough. The plants should not be exposed to strong sunlight immediately after being removed from the propagating case, but should be worked into it gradually, and fully exposed as soon as they are able to stand it.

Potting up should not be neglected, as the roots are soft and easily injured. If the plants are allowed to become pot-bound, so that the roots are clinging freely to the sides of the pots, serious check is apt to result from moving. It is safest to keep them freely shifted up until they have attained the desired size for planting in the benches.

THE READERS' CORNER.

More About White Ants.

Referring to Mr. Totty's answer to your correspondent G. C. in the issue of September 13, I ask to be pardoned for "butting in." The white ants complained of by G. C. are not properly ants. They are what are known in the south as wood-lice. They have none of the habits of ants and live entirely under the ground, subsisting on rotten wood and the fiber of plants. When once established in a bed of chrysanthemums there is no cure for them known to me, and I fought them many years. The sure preventive is not to use any wood in the construction of the beds or benches and to avoid fertilizer that has any shavings or sawdust in it. The name wood-louse is often used in referring to the sow-bug or shot-bug. The latter seems most appropriate, as when touched it rolls into a perfect ball, resembling a shot. It does no damage to chrysanthemums unless by chance some open flower should touch the ground.

ADVICE TO BUYERS.

Harlow N. Higinbotham, on whose estate at Joliet the Chicago Carnation Co. is located, made a world-wide reputation as credit-man for Marshall Field & Co. In a recent series of articles in the Saturday Evening Post, of Philadelphia, Mr. Higinbotham gives sound advice, which applies as well to florists as to any other line. He said in part:

"A mistake frequently made by the merchant who is not uncommonly broad in his mental grasp of things is the notion that he is acting shrewdly to split his business up between two or more jobbers in order to get them to bid against each other. The inevitable result of this practice is to make the buyer's trade undesirable to any of the firms with which he attempts to do business. While it is possible that this kind of a trick may be worked by a country merchant to his temporary advantage, he gives the city jobber too little credit for shrewdness and intelligence when he thinks that this game can be played indefinitely with success. Splitting up his trade among several jobbers can have but one result for the country merchant; all of the jobbers will soon realize that he is a bird of passage and that they must get what they can out of him in short order. They will find his weakness as a buyer and will make him pay for his instability and shiftiness.

"As a matter of fact, however, the very best jobbing houses will discourage the business of a buyer of this sort, and will have as little to do with him as possible. They will be quick to realize that his business is not worth while, and that he will never become a steady and valuable customer.

"It is always worth while for the country merchant to make his business an object to a good jobber. This not only results in giving the country storekeeper the support of a good line of credit, but it also insures him the permanent and active interest of the jobber in his welfare and progress. There are a hundred ways in which the man in the jobbing house can favor and assist the country merchant, and he is bound to do this if the storekeeper is a steady and valued customer. In short, there is only one rule for the country storekeeper to observe in his buying, and that is to make his business an object to the jobber.

"The storekeeper who attempts to buy his goods by submitting lists to various jobbing houses and having them all bid upon the same goods does not realize that there are tricks in the jobbing trade as well as in the retail merchandizing business; and that some shifty wholesaler will undoubtedly send in a bid which will look to be much lower than the total of the bid submitted by the more established and high-class jobber. Naturally the low bid is the one accepted, and the country storekeeper feels that he has done a cunning piece of trading until he actually receives the goods. Then he discovers that certain of the articles purchased are of inferior grade or quality to those demanded in his specifications; he indignantly rejects these goods and returns them, demanding that the 'mistake' shall be corrected. This is cheerfully done, and no doubt with profuse apologies, but the country buyer is left to realize, if he is shrewd enough to do so, that this little ruse has been the means, on the part of the shifty jobber, of selling the balance of the bill of goods."

RETAIL ADVERTISING.

This is the season at which every retail florist should take up the matter of the advertising he will do during the approaching season. Too many florists do their advertising in a hit-or-miss fashion. A plan should be prepared, at least mentally, outlining exactly what will be done during the entire season.

The best way to go about a season's advertising is first to determine the amount of money which may be devoted to the purpose. This point having been settled, it is then in order to divide it into the parts to be devoted to the several forms of advertising. It is desirable to send out, at certain seasons, neatly printed announcements to one's regular customers, and to the names of those one would like to add to his list.

But the best form of advertising, and also that which is least expensive in the long run, is newspaper advertising. Determine how much money you have to spend in your local papers and then arrange for a regular space in each edition during the season. It is far better to use a small space regularly than to use a large space spasmodically.

If you feel that you are not in a position to make a large investment in newspaper space, pick out the best paper in your town and confine your advertising to it. It is better to make a good showing in the best paper than to make a weaker showing in several papers. It usually is not difficult to pick out the best paper. You invariably will find that the publication carrying the most advertising is the one which reaches the greater number of buyers in your community. Like waters seeking a common level, advertisements flow in to the paper experience shows to be best read. The amount of classified advertising carried by your daily papers is an especially good index as to which has the most readers.

Aside from providing for a small space regularly, you should provide for a little extra advertising at Thanksgiving, Christmas, Easter, Memorial day, etc.

The next thing is to provide attractive copy for your space. The accompanying retail advertisements, which have been published by the trade, are not for the purpose of showing what should be done, so much as showing how attractive small advertisements may be made to appear. A priced advertisement is always better than one without a price.

Whatever you do, change your advertisement regularly. If you are advertising in a weekly paper, you should change the advertisement at least every three or four weeks, and every week would be better. If it is a daily paper, see to it that the advertisement is changed at least once a week. The largest and most successful advertisers change their advertisements frequently.

STORING HARDY CUT FERNS.

Please tell us how to keep cut ferns? If I put them in a box with damp moss in a cellar they turn brown and decay. I tried not so much moss and in a cool, damp place (under a water trough), where no sunshine shone on them, with the same results. What shall I do to preserve them for a time? W. H.

Retail florists who purchase cut ferns in moderate quantities usually keep them in a metal pan of sufficient size so that it takes a number of bunches to cover the bottom. After placing a layer of bunches they are lightly sprinkled, another layer added and sprinkled, and so on until the pan is piled a foot or so high. A damp cloth is put over the ferns and they are given a handy place in the workroom. They should be kept from heat and sun but need not go in the ice-box. Under such conditions hardy cut ferns will keep in first-class condition for a number of days, but it should not be expected that a season's supply may be bought and kept without special storage provision.

If the inquiry contemplates storing ferns for months, the best advice is, don't try it. Buy your ferns as you need them—a week's supply at a time. To store ferns for the season it is necessary to keep them constantly at a freezing temperature, and shippers and jobbers who have large sums at stake are unable to say when they put stock in storage what shape it will come out in.

THE CYCLAMEN.

Potting.

Continuing the subject of a simple method of growing cyclamen, begun in the REVIEW of August 16:

As growth warrants, proceed to remove from the flats in the same manner as the seedlings were, and pot into 2¼-inch pots, shifting when large enough into 3-inch, in which size they will remain until put out for the summer.

If late in sowing seeds, or they are slow in starting, it is quite probable that the shift to 3-inch will not be necessary. Soil for potting need not differ from that used to prick out seedlings.

Although procedure up to this point varies but little from that pursued under continuous culture in pots, it was thought best to take up the matter from the beginning for the benefit of those having had limited experience handling this most desirable plant.

The Summer Frame.

Following is a description of the frame as constructed and used by the writer for culture outside during the summer:

The front is of two planks 2x12 inches, set on edge, the back the same except that it is three planks high. Stakes are driven at intervals on either side, and serve to hold the planks in place; every ten feet, pieces of sashbar let in flush with the top edge and nailed back and front add to the stability. As sashes 3x6 feet are used, the lines of planks are placed five and one-half feet apart, allowing the sashes to overhang in front.

Across the ends at the bottom are nailed 12-inch boards, the space above being left open for circulation of air, but covered with 1-inch mesh poultry netting to exclude animals.

This frame was constructed of 2-inch planks for the reason that the material was at hand, the lumber having previously done service as a sidewalk. One-inch boards will answer equally well, and it is no matter how rough they are.

Care in Drainage.

The cyclamen having a dread of wet feet, it is necessary that the ground upon which the frame stands be of such nature, or raised by grading in a manner with such material, that water will quickly pass through. This is highly important, as the less we are obliged to resort to artificial watering the better, there being nothing so beneficial to this plant as to obtain its needed supply of moisture in Nature's way. With the sashes off or tilted back on the approach of a storm, there is no danger, provided under-drainage is good.

Of course, in case of long continued rains, the sashes would be replaced after a time and during thunder storms kept closed.

A good location is on the north side of an east-and-west house, the building being a sufficient distance away to allow access to either side of the frame, and the frame of such a length as to accommodate the number of plants grown.

Soil for Frame.

Having previously whitewashed the interior, proceed to fill the frame with a soil mixture in about the proportion of four parts rotted sod, containing a small amount of manure, to one of leaf-mold or rotted peat.

Preserve an even density throughout by raking it to a level as filling proceeds, but keep yourself outside. When even with the top of the 12-inch board at the ends, give a generous sprinkling of sand, a good dusting of air-slaked lime, rake in lightly and all is in readiness for the plants.

Estimating four rows across the frame and plants set sixteen inches apart in the row, a 100-foot frame will hold 300 plants, but for best results it is advisable to provide a frame carrying thirty-five 3x6 sashes for this number of plants, as it is not safe to plant nearer than two feet from the open ends.

It will be necessary to shade the glass, and there is nothing better than white lead thinned with naphtha to the consistency of milk and applied with a brush. Let the first application be a light one, giving a second and heavier one as the sun's heat increases.

Planting Out.

When ready to plant, knock out no more than can be immediately set. Reduce the ball slightly at its upper rim, keeping the lower part intact. Plant firmly, taking care that at the finish the bulb or corm is not covered.

A wide board, about the width of the frame in length, on which to kneel when planting, will prove handy and prevent soil from becoming trodden.

The time to plant out will vary slightly in different parts of the country, but if put in the frame a week or two before the time to plant carnations in the field, it is well enough.

Summer Care.

Care through spring and summer consists of removing weeds, an occasional light stirring of the surface soil, manipulation of sashes for ventilation through the day, or to take advantage of rain to supply needed moisture, and, should occasion demand, a watering with the hose.

When ventilating, do not slide the sashes back, but use blocks of wood fashioned to hold at various heights and raise every other sash; this provides more ventilation than if the whole line were raised the same, and there is less danger of wind lifting the sashes.

When nearly two-thirds grown, many plants will persist in blooming, but experience has proven this to result in no harm, if blooms are removed at the proper time in the right way. Allow them to develop fully, then with the stem between thumb and forefinger, roll as if making a paper lamp lighter, at the same time giving a steady upward pull, and the stem should come away entire. This is important, as a small portion left on the plant will decay, and cause trouble.

Subsequent treatment will be described in an early issue. GEO. S. OSBORN.

A LATE START.

Is it too late to plant violets for winter flowers, and especially for Easter? If not, would you take the large field clumps and plant them just as they are? What variety would you prefer, Princess of Wales or California? N. O. T.

Although three months' time has elapsed since the violet specialists began planting their houses, other growers still are filling odd corners with field-grown plants and may reasonably expect a fair crop, "especially for Easter." There was a time when practically all violet plants were grown outdoors in summer and benched in early autumn, but better results were found to follow June planting under glass. As to variety, it is largely a local question. Probably more growers succeed with Campbell than with Princess of Wales, but many markets will not take Campbell. H. O.

EMBELLISHMENT OF WAYSIDES.

[A paper by J. A. Pettigrew, read before the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston, April 17, 1906.]

Recognition of the value of trees as an adornment to streets, in this country, dates from an early period. In Mr. Albert Matthews' intensely interesting address on the history of the trees of Boston Common, delivered a year or two ago before the Boston Common Society, we find that as early as March 3, 1655, interest was manifested in the preservation of trees. At a town meeting held that day, an order was passed, that "Whosoever shall cut, hack, or hew any of the trees planted in the Neck, shall pay for every tree so spoiled, twenty shillings, the one-half to the informer, the other to the town."

On May 12, 1701, a by-law was passed that "No person shall lop, peel, girdle, or deface any of the trees now standing or that shall hereafter be planted or set by order of the selectmen, or by their approbation, upon any part of, or place in, the common ground of the town, under penalty for every such offense."

Although not so stated, it is presumable that these were public trees; but, whether or not, the order reveals to us the fact that the early pioneers of Boston recognized the value of trees as an adornment to the town, and the necessity of their preservation.

In one respect we have not progressed much since that day, 247 years ago, twenty-five years after the first settlement was made. We have with us today, as the early founders of Boston had in 1655, those who "cut, hack or otherwise 'spoyled'" trees; and it is to be feared that their numbers have increased since the days when the Puritans made the order. We have also, in goodly numbers, the small boy with his ever-ready pocket-knife, to whom the smooth stem of a tree is a sore temptation—a temptation as irresistible as was the cherry-tree to George Washington in his boyhood days.

Then, too, the trees on the curb of every street, bear ghastly evidence of the gnawing of generations of unhitched horses; indeed, it is not an uncommon thing to find hitching-rings driven into fine old trees.

Modern Despoilers.

In addition to the despoilers of trees of "ye olden time," we have the modern gas companies, and the city sewerage and water departments, whose employees, seldom giving thought to the destruction they are working, cut off more roots from our street trees than would be necessary, were the work done under intelligent direction.

To counterbalance, as it were, the lopping off of the roots under the surface, we have the cutting and slashing of the branches by employees of the various corporations whose business requires the use of overhead wires.

When one sees these battle-scarred veterans of the streets enduring ill-use year after year, and sometimes decade after decade, yet still putting forth leaves in the spring, in a struggle for existence, one cannot but realize that nature has endowed many of our trees with remarkable endurance and great adaptability for planting in our streets.

Trees may be ranked among the noblest products of nature, and this adaptability for beautifying and shading streets is a great boon to city dwellers, and one that is not appreciated to the full; else, why should such mutilation be perpetrated? or why should it be permitted by those in authority, whose duty it is to protect the interests of the public? Ignorance of trees and their requirements undoubtedly has much to do with it. Carelessness, thoughtlessness, and the fierce fight for gain are among the causes which despoil our trees; and when we consider that, in addition to this danger from the hand of man, there is still to be added the ravages of insects and lower organisms, the wonder is that so many beautiful trees are to be found in our streets.

In addition to shading streets and waysides, trees lend a softening effect to the hard, and too often inharmonious, lines of closely built-up streets, and thus appeal to the artistic sense, both in summer and winter.

Sanitary Value.

Trees, too, through their foliage, evaporate a great deal of water, which they draw from the ground. Thus, while cooling the atmosphere, they at the same time sweeten the ground by draining off stagnant water. They also consume noxious gases and send out those that are life-giving.

In support of the sanitary value of trees in the public streets, may be cited the resolution passed by the New York County Medical Society:

Resolved, That one of the most effective means for mitigating the intense heat of the summer months and diminishing the death rate among children is the cultivating of an adequate number of trees in the streets.

This may be further illustrated by the fact that the bill which was presented to the New York legislature in 1899, to put the care of street trees in charge of the park commissioners, was drawn by a physician, a member of the State Board of Health, and was introduced merely as a sanitary measure.

Art Commissioner's View.

Milo R. Maltbie, Assistant Secretary of the New York Art Commission, as agent of the commission and under the auspices of the State Department of the United States, went to Europe, two years ago, to investigate the progress of civic improvement in the cities of northern Europe. In his report he says: "That trees and green grass-plots should be used on all streets and avenues wherever possible is so apparent that it hardly needs mention. Nothing adds so much to the beauty of a street, or so tempers the heat and glare of hot summer days, as lines of wide-spreading trees and plots of green grass, with an adequate supply of benches for those who wish to rest and enjoy the changing scenes."

"The ample provisions made by many European cities have turned many boulevards into continuous park systems."

It is to be regretted that in laying out new streets, the tendency of the day is toward the narrowing of the sidewalks, and the omission of any provision for a tree-planting space. Boston, with its suburbs, is suffering from this evil, which portends badly for the beauty of its streets in the future; the absence of provision for planting will quickly relegate such streets to squalor and obscurity.

This tendency of the present day is in striking contrast to the early public records, which demonstrate the fact that the Puritan Fathers, in the midst of their strenuous life, had in mind the beautifying of their surroundings by the planting of trees; and that they ordered, through their selectmen, that trees should be planted by the town. Quoting again from Mr. Matthews' address:

"On February 11, 1711 or 1712, it was voted by the selectmen that a convenient number of trees be provided to plant on the sides of each burying-place where it shall be thought proper."

THE CONWAY ASTER.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph taken a few days ago in the aster field of F. A. Conway & Co., Indianapolis. The variety is a seedling of Mr. Conway's own raising, which has made many friends this season among the retailers of Indianapolis. Bertermann Bros. Co. have used it largely and Irvin Bertermann speaks highly of it. The color is pure white, the flower of unusual size and fine shape. As the illustration shows, the plants are of fairly tall growth, affording long stems during the season. The period of blooming is mid-season to late. Mr. Conway has set aside a large number of his best plants for seed production.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.—Ben Carlisle will soon move into the new Thatcher building, on South Main street.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—The board of public improvements has let a contract for the erection of a greenhouse in Forest park, near the site of the old Inside Inn, the cost to be $2,090.

DELANO, MINN.—John Vasatka, while conducting his greenhouses, has acquired a reputation as an unerring weather prophet. He predicts a long season of heat such as never has been known in the fall.

AURORA, ILL.—The J. M. Smely establishment was the scene of a small fire, September 9.

SOCIETY OF SOUTHERN FLORISTS.

When, about a year ago, at the banquet for the installation of the new officers of the New Orleans Horticultural Society, the proposition of a southern society of florists was brought up by C. R. Panter, the idea of every member was the improvement of the trade in general and the creation of an organization which was found needed.

What the florists of the south were ten years ago, what they now are, and what they will be in the near future, are entirely different. With better understanding of special culture, more capital and more enterprise, a large quantity of the plants and flowers now sent by the north to the south will be sent by the south to the north. Cuttings of many plants can be made here better and cheaper. Seeds of shrubs have time to come to maturity during a longer season and can be germinated in a natural way without artificial heat. Bedding plants in the spring can be shipped from here at half the price asked in the north, and of a size and quality superior. We want the north to take that well under consideration.

Consequently an organization of our own is needed, without any idea of interfering in any way with any one already established and acting under many different circumstances. It is with that spirit only and with the firm conviction that nothing but good will come out of it that this new idea was brought forward and started without any efforts to the best of our own expectations.

In conclusion I would say that the first convention of the Society of Southern Florists will take place in New Orleans some time during the spring of 1907. We will be ready to receive the florists from the south or from the north in a thoroughly southern style and hospitality. They will not see thousands of square feet of glass and smokestacks hundreds of feet high, but plants grown outside under a climate far superior to that of the north for at least a great majority of plants, and we urge once more every florist of the south to join the new society and advise our rich northern florists to come also and see what prospects are before us. They surely will be cordially received.

HORTICULTURAL CONGRESS.

The National Council of Horticulture, embracing, as it does, the broad interests of horticulture, has had under consideration the matter of a National Congress of Horticulture, to convene at Jamestown, Va., some time during the exposition period.

In view, therefore, of the interest manifested by a large number of persons, representing various branches of horticultural activity, it has been deemed expedient to arrange for a National Congress of Horticulture to convene at the Jamestown exposition during the week of August 19 to 24, 1907. The purpose of such a gathering is to consider topics of horticultural interest in their broadest meaning, and to bring the more or less scattered branches into more close union, with a view that such a gathering would add inspiration and profit to all participants and others who are in attendance, and should be the means of dignifying and advancing horticulture in all of its departments. In addition to the representatives of the broader interests, it is the purpose of the council to include in the assemblage leading specialists of the various divisions of horticultural work, who will consider topics of interest to the specialist, before either regular or special meetings of the several national societies, in case they arrange to hold a meeting at this time. Otherwise, such topics will be presented before departmental or sectional meetings of the congress representing the particular subject.

The exposition, situated, as it is, in the midst of a field rich in horticultural products and easily accessible to a large number who are interested in one or more branches of this great industry, should insure an attendance commensurate with the interests involved. The exposition company, together with the Norfolk Horticultural and Pomological Society, guarantees every possible courtesy, and offers facilities which will make the meeting place ample and convenient. Any society arranging to meet in affiliation with this congress may hold its regular sessions independently and without conflicting with any of the sessions of the congress.

All persons interested in any phase of horticulture are therefore asked to cooperate in this movement, and all local, state and national societies are invited and urged to be represented either by holding their regular session, or by duly authorized delegates. It is hoped that this congress will bring together a multitude of horticulturists that could hardly be expected to come together in any other manner, and that a goodly number of the national societies will decide to hold a regular session during the week in which the congress is in session.

PROPAGATING FICUS.

Please state the proper time and way to root rubbers.

H. H. K.

The ordinary rubber, Ficus elastica, may be rooted by means of the topping method at any period of the year, provided that sufficient heat and moisture are maintained, but the best time for this operation is while the weather is warm, namely in the spring and summer, at which time the growths will frequently root in from two to three weeks.

The topping of ficus is a simple process, and consists in making an incision with a sharp knife so as to cut about half way through the growth, the cut being made below the third or fourth leaf from the top of the shoot. Next pass a piece of twine through the cut so as to keep it open, and bind a lump of damp moss around the incision, using the twine to keep it firmly in place, the finished job simply showing a lump of moss about the size of an egg.

This moss is then kept moist by frequent sprinklings, and when several roots may be seen coming through the moss, it is time to cut off the shoot and pot it in a 3 or 4-inch pot according to its size. Protect the young plants from the sun and wind for a few days after potting and they will soon become established. Ficus may be satisfactorily topped now, but if done after November 1, progress is likely to be slow.

W. H. TAPLIN.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The park commissioners have decided not to build the $10,000 conservatory they were figuring on until next year. Joseph Bernand is park superintendent.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

At the end of last week the market was feeling severely the effect of the long continued warm weather and, although we now have more seasonable temperature, both retailers and wholesalers would be better pleased were it cooler. Up to September 24 the excess for 1906 was 775 degrees, for the 267 days which had elapsed a record hitherto unprecedented in the history of the weather bureau. It takes brisk weather to make the flower business active.

Nevertheless this week opened with a demand which cleaned up all good stock and made the wholesalers hustle to fill late orders. The demand for Beauties has been something phenomenal. There have been and are large cuts, but the stock is cleaned up nicely each day. Strange to say most of the crop is long-stemmed. It is difficult to find enough medium and short lengths to supply the out-of-town orders and these grades command a premium. Brides and Maids are showing improvement more rapidly since cool nights have come. Some good stock is to be had, but much short stuff still is seen. Richmond is fine and Chate-nay shows up well. Kaiserin is retiring for the season. Mrs. Marshall Field is coming along in splendid shape.

The heavy rains last week about finished off the asters. Not much was left but white and since the downpour these mostly have been rotted and good stock is extremely difficult to supply. The departure of the aster has made a demand this week for white carnations and this stock is cleaning out much better than heretofore. Enchantress is about the best variety now in the market, but other sorts are showing much improvement, both in length of stem and size of flower.

Gladioli and dahlias are cutting little figure. Other outdoor stock also is about out of the market. Valley continues in demand. Violets are beginning to arrive but are not yet good for much. Easter lilies have shortened up and advanced in price. Chrysanthemums show no change. Monrovia and a few scattering whites are about all that are available. The real first crop will not be along for another fortnight. Green goods of all sorts are abundant.

Violets.

New York violets have been arriving daily for nearly a week. They yet are pale and shaky, but the retailers all have been buying for novelty's sake.

Walter J. Pells, of Rhinebeck, last season had some of the best violets handled by the A. L. Randall Co. Last year he wrapped each bunch in special paper, and this year he has in addition placed a rubber stamp on each wrapper so that the buyers may more easily identify his goods. It is one of the first attempts made in this market to trademark stock, a practice which always works to the profit of the man producing the best goods.

As a general proposition the local retailers have tired of buying violets direct from the grower. The distance is great and many shipments suffer in transit. If bought on direct order the retailer stands the loss, but if bought of a commission house the retailer sees the goods before he buys and the grower stands any damage in transit. The retailers find it more satisfactory to pay the market price, and it works out fully as well for the grower.

Flower Show Plans.

The Horticultural Society of Chicago has leased the Coliseum for November 6 to 11 and proposes to repeat the success achieved by last year's exhibition. The same staff will be in charge: George Asmus, manager; P. J. Hauswirth, chairman committee on admissions; Jas. Burdette, press representative. It should be a big show, as combined with it will be the annual exhibition of the Chrysanthemum Society of America. It is planned to open Tuesday evening and continue through Sunday, following the lead of Boston in this respect. There was a meeting of the executive committee at the Auditorium Monday at which committees were appointed. To gather new ideas and stimulate enthusiasm the Horticultural Society will give a supper at the Union, on Randolph street, at 7 o'clock next Monday evening, to which all workers and prospective workers will be invited. Leonard Kill has charge of the arrangements and expects an attendance of at least 100.

Enchantress is Supreme.

As the carnation crops begin to gather volume it becomes more apparent the extent to which the growers have increased their plantings of Enchantress. It looks as though half the carnations grown for this market this season are Enchantress. This may be an exaggeration, but it is certainly putting it mildly to say that Enchantress far outnumbers any other sort. It appears that most

POEHLMANN BROS. CO.

WHOLESALE GROWERS OF CUT FLOWERS

33-37 Randolph St. Phone, Central 3573 Chicago, Ill.

Mention The Review when you write.

Frank Ganarus, a Greek florist, has caused the arrest of John Lambros, an employee, late of Chicago and lamented by wholesalers, charging him with embezzling $32.75. Lambros denies he ever took a penny not his own.

Stollery Bros. have practically retired from the wholesale line, now that so much stock is required for their new store at 1983 Evanston avenue, where Mrs. Fred Stollery presides. The store is 22x66 and is fine for keeping plants. A large trade rapidly is developing there. Fred Stollery now spends most of his time on the market, buying, and George looks after the greenhouses and trade at the old Edgewater place.

Visitors.

Among the week's visitors were Hugo Schroeter and wife, of Detroit, Mr. Schroeter purchasing stock for a big decoration they have each autumn; B. Jurgens, Peoria, Ill.; Mrs. Kate Seel and daughter, Benton Harbor, Mich.; Mr. Meyer, of the Meyer Drug Co., Shreveport, La., who have a florists' department; Robt. Simmons, of Simmons & Larson, Morris, Ill., who was accompanied by a lady who became his wife after their arrival here on Saturday.

SARATOGA, N. Y.—T. J. Totten is erecting a Lord & Burnham house, 30 x100.

TIPTON, IA.—A house 20x100 feet, added during the summer, gives Mr. Shiffer, proprietor of the Tipton Greenhouses, 4,000 feet of glass for this season. A new heating apparatus is nearly completed. Stock looks well.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

The market is improving. Roses and carnations are more plentiful, and of better quality. The stems of carnations are short, but the flowers are good. Asters are nearly out of the market. Fine spikes of tuberose are coming in, but the demand is poor. Very few dahlias are on the market. Some of the stores are using golden-rod to decorate their show windows and it looks fine. We are all waiting for mums to help make a show in the stores, but it will be some time, as the buds are yet small on many varieties.

The sale on palms and ferns is practically at a standstill with florists, as the large department stores have them by the carload and are selling them at extremely low prices. This is done to draw trade, and the florist who is depending upon the fall sales of his plants has this to contend with.

Various Notes.

Ed A. Humfeld has just received a large shipment of decorating palms from Philadelphia. He anticipates doing a lot of decorating this season, and is preparing early. He is also installing one more boiler; the present heating system is insufficient in severe weather. That new wagon of his is a daisy and there is nothing like it on the boulevard.

The W. L. Rock Flower Co. store, which has been remodeled this summer, is now finished. The chief decorations in the large show window were vases of Easter lilies and purple asters.

Arthur Newell has been taking the world easy. He can be seen often with his fine sorrel horse and buggy.

The Kansas City Cut Flower Co. has more cut flowers in its window than all the other stores put together. The display is worth seeing.

Ernest Greschoff, who has charge of the Paseo flower beds, has them up to perfection and is hard at work endeavoring to keep them so until October 2. During the first week in October, the city will be crowded with carnival visitors from all parts of the neighboring country.

George M. Kellogg's large automobile is again in service.

C. Laundry is doing a prosperous business. He has built one more greenhouse this summer; also a potting shed, and is improving his place in general. His stock is looking well.

W. J. Barnes has opened a fine cut-flower store in Westport at 3920 Main street. From all appearances he has started at the right place, as he will have no opposition within three miles, and being close to one of the most popular dancing halls in the city, Mr. Barnes will surely do well. His greenhouses are located at Thirty-eighth and Euclid, where he grows extensively cut flowers and plants for bedding.

Kansas City, Kan., is coming to the front in the florists' business. Mrs. Moseley has just returned from the east, where she has purchased a large lot of florists' supplies, also decorating plants. She is now busy decorating her new store, which when completed will be one of the best in Kansas. She is located in the heart of the city, being on Minnesota avenue, and there is no doubt but that she will make a success of it.

Another change in Kansas City, Kan., is that Mr. Hoffman, a market gardener, has purchased the greenhouse and office fixtures formerly owned by Sam Short, on Sixth street. Mr. Hoffman will continue the business as heretofore. We understand that James Biggam, formerly with the Charles Shaeffer Floral Co., of Kansas City, Mo., has accepted a position in the store. Busy.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business at last shows some signs of improvement, but nothing as yet to call any of us rushed. The window displays have materially increased the sales. Monday, some of the retailers were kept busy with designs for the opening of a large wholesale jewelry house in the Star building, where some good work was seen.

Outdoor stock is becoming scarce, and about the only arrivals that are worth mentioning are in roses and carnations. Roses are much better, and some extra good stock is in. Besides Brides and Maids, Kaiserin, Carnot, and Richmond are seen. Carnations, too, are improving in the size of bloom and length of stems. Enchantress are the best. Red and pink are not plentiful. There are more white than any others. Prices on some of the Enchantress have gone up to $2 per hundred.

Extra good valley can now be had. Asters are about over for this season.

Chrysanthemums are, as yet, limited. Smilax is in good demand, and so is almost anything in greens.

Various Notes.

J. J. Kierens, representing Henry A. Dreer, Philadelphia, Pa., was in town last week.

A. C. Brown, of Springfield, Ill., called on the local commission-men the past week. Mr. Brown while here was booming the Springfield fair.

George Waldbart, son of Alex. Waldbart, was married last week to Miss Emma R. Hyler. It was a surprise to many of Mr. Waldbart's friends in the trade.

Louis A. Giger, who is with Mrs. M. M. Ayers, will be married this week to Miss Marie Hirshfelt.

Henry Braun, one of the best carnation and rose growers here, has left the employ of A. Jablonsky, who has a large range of glass at Central. He is a member of the local club.

Henry Ostertag last week handled some big fall openings, using a lot of cut stock and decorative plants.

Kuehn continues to receive daily a fine cut of yellow and white chrysanthemums. Berning had a lot of extra fine dahlias last week. Ellis handled an extra lot of good Brides and Maids. Angermueller is well supplied with Beauties and other roses.

Henry Berning will this week Wednesday act as judge of flowers at the Centralia, Ill., fair. He will act in the same capacity at the Sedalia, Mo., fair next week.

Frank Fillmore met with a loss last week. His fine watchdog, Monk, was killed. Monk was known to all the traveling men in the trade!

Councilman Rolfes has sounded the death knell of the crepe pullers in St. Louis by introducing an ordinance in the council prohibiting peddlers or agents from ringing front doorbells, or soliciting orders of any kind. In part the ordinance reads:

It shall be unlawful for any person without permission of the owner or occupant of private premises, used for a residence, to enter said premises or to ring the doorbell of any house, building, or other structure, situated thereon, for the purpose of begging or soliciting the sale or purchase of any article or thing whatsoever, or attempting to transact any business whatsoever, of whatever nature or description. Any one violating any of these provisions of this ordinance shall be deemed guilty of misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be fined for each offense not less than $5 nor more than $100.

When this comes up for passage, the local club should send a delegation to the meeting and urge its passage.

The organizing of a florists' bowling league has met with failure. Interest seems to have died out among the local florists. Last week Monday only six showed up at the alleys. Hereafter those who wish to bowl every Monday night will find us at the new DeSoto alleys on Pine street, between Seventh and Eighth streets.

Kuehn, Beyer, and Beneke have joined the house team, and Ellison, the Fern Glens. J. J. B.

OWATONNA, MINN.—T. E. Cashman, of the Clinton Falls Nursery Co., and his family, were poisoned September 10, supposedly by drinking milk from the family cow. Prompt medical aid is thought to have been the only thing which averted serious consequences.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

There is an unmistakable air of activity about the market that plainly indicates the approach of "the season." No one cause is responsible for the improvement. There have been some excellent out-of-town orders from a variety of places, while in town the Bryn Mawr horse show, with its attendant festivities, opened the social season. The demand for Beauties and for orchids was most noticeable. The supply of the former proved surprisingly inadequate. Asters worthy of the name are virtually over and this city owes hearty thanks to New York and New Jersey for contributing the finest stock of this popular flower ever seen here. Dahlias now reign supreme among fall flowers. The wholesalers have learned how to handle them advantageously, and immense quantities are distributed daily at moderate prices, the high figures of a year or two ago being rarely realized. Chrysanthemums are becoming a little more plentiful, Opah, white, and Monrovia, yellow, being the two varieties so far received. Opah appears to be over, but Monrovia is arriving in splendid form, the flowers being as fine as many of the midseason varieties. For the rest of the market it will suffice to say that the cooler weather of this week is beginning to improve the quality of the flowers.

The Flower Market.

A special meeting of the stockholders of the Philadelphia Wholesale Flower Market was held in the secretary's office in Horticultural hall last Tuesday afternoon to arrange a plan for liquidation. After a general discussion, a resolution was adopted ordering the board of directors to pay off the capital stock of the company as rapidly as is deemed safe and to protect the interests of the stall-holders until the present lease expires on July 1, 1907.

Various Notes.

H. Weber & Sons Co., Oakland, Md., is sending some fine chrysanthemums to Samuel S. Pennock.

The Leo Niessen Co. has been receiving large quantities of choice orchids of half a dozen different varieties.

Charles E. Meehan and forces will march out of the Flower Market on Saturday evening with drums beating and colors flying.

Paul J. Klingsporn has accepted a position with W. E. McKissick.

Eckert & Campbell, of Andalusia, Pa., are improving their greenhouse plant this season.

Geo. A. Strohle, of Henry A. Dreer Co., returned last week from his European trip.

The friends of Wm. J. Baker heard with joy that he was going to take a holiday—alas! the rumor was unfounded.

John McIntyre will open his wholesale store at 1601 Ranstead street instead of 1237 Filbert street, next Monday.

A visitor to Girard College commented on the robust growth made by some hybrid tea roses in pots under glass during the hot summer. "We never forget to water them," was Edwin Lonsdale's reply.

BOSTON.

The Market.

The past week proved one of the hottest of the season, and the cut-flower business was completely demoralized, and while cooler climatic conditions are now improving matters, there is much room for betterment. The smaller grades of roses have once more sunk to 50 cents per hundred. There has been a fair call for good Beauties and Wellesley, but only a moderate demand for other grades and varieties. Carnations also have been in oversupply, and prices have softened. Asters are getting poor and nearing the end.

Chrysanthemums and single violets arrive in small lots, but the last named will be plentiful in a few days. Some dahlias have arrived, but they are not in much request in the Boston market, as everyone with a garden seems to have them. A killing frost is needed to stimulate trade.

Various Notes.

A delegation from the garden committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, consisting of W. H. Elliott, A. H. Fewkes, G. W. Parker, W. P. Rich and W. Wheeler, visited the Morton F. Plant estate, at Groton, Conn., September 21, the estate being in competition for the Hunnewell triennial premium. Considerable improvements were noticed since a previous visit, and everything on the place was well kept. Chrysanthemums, grapes, carnations, etc., were all found in excellent condition. The party was entertained at lunch by Thomas W. Head, the superintendent gardener, and in addition to the gardens visited the stock, poultry and vegetable farms, spending an enjoyable day.

The new seed store of the H. E. Fiske Co. opened its doors on September 19, and during the whole of that day and the rest of the week, attracted a large number of visitors. The store, which is the one formerly occupied by W. W. Rawson & Co., and which was destroyed by fire early last spring, has been rebuilt and fitted up in the most approved and up-to-date manner. The large show windows are attractive. A feature in them the opening week was an extensive display of dahlias furnished by J. K. Alexander. Many gladioli, herbaceous plants, asparagus, etc., also were used. The new firm occupies the entire building and is equipped to do a first-class trade.

George E. Buxton, of Nashua, N. H., has this season the finest lot of carnations he has ever housed. Two benches, containing 3,000 plants of Helen Goddard are fine. Mr. Buxton has just installed one of the celebrated Martin rocking grates in his ninety horse-power steam boiler.

Peter Murray, of Fairhaven, raiser and New England agent for the Winsor carnation, reports excellent advance sales for this fine variety. He also reports that his own local trade has been exceptionally good this year.

The sincere sympathy of a host of friends goes out to James Garthly, superintendent for H. H. Rogers, of Fairhaven, in the death of his wife at her old home in Perthshire, Scotland, September 17. Mr. Garthly, in response to a cable, sailed September 15, on the Campania. Mrs. Garthly had not been strong for some years, and it was hoped a summer in Scotland would benefit her.

Rudolph Gaedeke, of the firm of A. Gaedeke & Co., Nashua, N. H., has returned from a six weeks' vacation spent in Germany and Scotland. He had a fine time, but says the stars and stripes are good enough for him.

Ernest Stickel has taken H. E. Tyler's place as salesman for the Montrose Greenhouses, the latter having gone to western Canada to start in business.

S. J. Goddard and J. E. Buxton judged the floral exhibit at the recent Concord, N. H., state fair, and report a good show.

September temperature records were shattered the past week, shade readings of 90 degrees and 95 degrees, being recorded on September 19, September 20 and September 21. The drought which had prevailed since the beginning of August has at last been broken up by copious rains.

The Massachusetts Horticultural Society's annual exhibition of fruits and vegetables will be held at Horticultural hall Wednesday and Thursday, October 10 and 11. Much interest is being shown in this exhibition as it is the first exclusive fruit and vegetable show that has been held for some years, and the committee in charge proposes to make it a grand success.

All persons interested in fruit and vegetable culture are invited to send their best specimens to this exhibition and to attend themselves. It will be an educational opportunity, and will excite enthusiasm and stimulate interest in these two great departments of the society's work. The admission will be free.

Copies of the schedule of prizes can be had on application to William P. Rich, secretary, Horticultural hall, Boston.

The Market.

We thought the clouds had lifted from the market when we wrote a week ago, but "the worst is yet to come." Day after day it has been close to 100 degrees in the shade—96 degrees on Saturday at Rhinebeck, where the violets grow. Imagine the color and perfume of the few that came down the river! No wonder they sold as low as 15 cents a hundred. Thirteen boxes of them altogether—an unlucky number! Better wait, you shippers, till "the frost is on the pumpkin," and have things right. Who wants to wear violets with a "peek-a-boo" waist?

And the roses—you should have seen them Saturday! Beautiful when they were cut and started on their journey. Wilted beyond redemption after the trip in Dayton temperature. Box after box sold in bulk, at prices I wouldn't mention, and at the week's close the equinoctial storm, or something like it, but without the frost so greatly needed to start the cut flower wheels in motion. Everybody is ready; every store spick and span in paint and repair and facility, for all the business the prosperous times can bring.

The storm finished the asters, but a quantity remained over in cold storage, splendidly preserved, so there was no lack in supply for several days. A few gladioli are left. Quite a supply came in on Saturday, but Omega was their name. They have maintained their popularity most encouragingly, and the new varieties were much admired.

Beauties last week were not up to the standard, and prices fell, some of the best as low as $10 a hundred.

Dahlias have gone slowly, even the best of the single and cactus kinds, and the hot weather affected them perceptibly. Now come the chrysanthemums to put about everything else out of business for awhile.

Carnations are short-stemmed and small, and prices have not yet changed for the better. Orchids are abundant. They do duty in the retail windows. Prices have fallen. Goodly quantities are shipped daily to the leading florists of the other cities.

Various Notes.

Some fine exhibits of orchids will be seen at the next meeting of the Florists' Club, October 8, and doubtless a few of the earlier chrysanthemums. We are looking for some surprises from Totty this season, and are not likely to be disappointed.

Traendly & Schenck are preparing the entire floor above their big store for their increasing business, and will occupy it about October 1. Evidently this house looks into the future with an optimistic eye. The engagement of Charles Schenck, the junior partner, to Rebecca Pachner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Pachner, is announced. Congratulations and celebrations are in order. Soon there will not be a bachelor wholesaler left. Two got back from their honeymoons last week.

L. Klein, at 1262 Third avenue, and wife, have returned from a six weeks' trip on the Great Lakes.

Charles Millang has prepared for his European importations of box trees and retinisporea by leasing the big store and yard at 45 West Twenty-ninth street, across the street from his present establishment, and will fit it up thoroughly for his plant department. These two stores will give him ample room for his growing trade.

Walter Sheridan will return from his summer home on the Sound to his city residence next week.

S. Rodh, the ribbon man on West Twenty-eighth street, has returned from an enjoyable trip through New England. He reports business good and prospects bright in his line of supplies.

Joseph Fenrich is handling Totty's Adiantum Farleyense in pots, and the fine valley and mums from Anton Schultheis.

Adam Trefel, of Brooklyn, opened a new store Saturday evening at the corner of Monroe street and Broadway. He also has a fine place on DeKalb and Vanderbilt avenues.

C. C. Trefel will have a $1,500 team and wagon ready for his decorative and delivery work this fall, with headquarters at Lozier's. As usual, Mrs. Trefel is the able manager of the cut flower department.

Carl Hartmann, of Woodside, of Hartmann & Wagenfohr, has invented a flying machine, or airship, for which rumor says he has been offered $80,000. Those who have seen the invention say it's a flyer, and several of the leading aeronauts have taken stock in the enterprise. This will give some florists a chance to fly, for whom the prospects were not before encouraging.

The orchid collection of the late G. L. Montgomery will be sold at auction October 2, at 201 Fulton street, by Wm. Elliott & Sons. This is considered one of the best private collections in the country.

G. Fischer, on Coney Island avenue, Brooklyn, has a pair of latanias which have been in his possession for sixty years, or about ever since he started in the florists' business. Now they are giving him trouble because of their size.

A fitting close to the great pleasure resorts in this vicinity came with the heat of Sunday. The whole week of the Mardi Gras was hotter than any week of the summer, on the average. New York awoke to a fall of 30 degrees in temperature on Monday evening. The market and the florists both gave signs of recovery. It was on the whole a cheerful day and everything of good quality sold readily. Many of the big stores had their millinery openings and lots of flowers were called for.

P. O'Mara reports an enjoyable visit at White Marsh, Md., and a goodly attendance to mark the appreciation of the Vincent brand of hospitality. The north, however, hardly did itself justice in numbers.

plants and fruit; fine weather and a fair attendance. Now that asters have resigned, the dahlia should show its value and establish its importance as a factor in the wholesale trade. This week will tell the story.

At the next club meeting there is a good prospect of the formation of a bowling club that will last, and with O'Mara, Burns, Traendly and Will Siebrecht and the other old-reliables at its foundation, and with the elimination of lunches and tom-foolery, there is no reason why Philadelphia should carry off any more prizes in this generation.

The Pierson U-Bar Co. is making a specialty of greenhouse show rooms for florists. These are popular. They are constructed so no skilled mechanic is necessary and any local florist can erect them. The company reports a growing demand for them.

The wholesale and retail florists were anxiously looking for the ice wagons late on Monday. The trust threatens an increase in price and declares a shortage. Boats were delayed and deliveries few, but the weather turned chilly in the nick of time. Last week such a condition would have been a calamity. But ice is ice this year. One or two of the wholesalers bought the trust stock under $40 on Wall street and now it is over $90, so a little shortage of the real article makes but little difference to them.

The retail florists are running to vase window decoration. Very beautiful, these fancy vases are, and very salable, they tell me.

This seems to be the young man's century. Some of the bon-ton's best artists are growing ambitious. One or two with $10,000 backing are looking for good retail locations. Good men are wanted by the big retailers. Some splendid openings all the time. No man or woman floral artist of character and ability need look long here for a paying situation.

Mr. Kervan, Sr., of the Kervan Co., is now in North Carolina, visiting his galax and wild smilax shippers. Boxes of the latter are arriving daily, and the demand comes from as far as Buffalo and Cincinnati. The quality is excellent.

Rowehl & Granz, of Hicksville, are shipping grand tritomas to the market.

Mackintosh is back from his summer at Long Branch and, as usual, has been saving some young ladies from the undertow. He could become a life guard if reputation and swimming ability counted and the "great white way" should lose its fascination.

Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Boddington are back from their outing at Clark's Point, on Buzzard's Bay, near New Bedford. Mr. Boddington has a reputation for swordfish harpooning in other years.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Bunyard are at Cuttyhunk Island for their holiday, and Harry is senning in some fish stories that savor of the rarebit dream variety.

Next Monday Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Weathered celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding. The New York Club's congratulations certainly will be unanimous. This young couple look good for the golden anniversary before they climb the golden stairs.

Reed & Keller displayed a few of their novelty imports this week, some of them likely to create a sensation, especially the celluloid wreaths and crosses, the best imitation of natural flowers ever produced. They came from France. The bisque wreaths of all sizes are sure to be popular. Christmas bells with shower effects are the latest holiday suggestion. A late invention is a new cyeas clasp, handy and sure to be needed by every florist in the land. But, as Mr. Reed says, "Wait for the next steamer—the best is yet to come."

ELBERON, N. J.

An enthusiastic meeting of the Elberon Horticultural Society was held September 10. Three new members were elected and two more proposed. It was decided to have a dahlia show at the next meeting, in October. Many prizes were donated by the members present and everything points to a good display of this popular flower.

Some nice exhibits were staged, notably a vase of Mamon Cochet roses by A. Bauer. W. D. Robertson showed a vase of Clematis vitalba. J. Kennedy exhibited a vase of dahlias and A. Greib showed a dish of French yard-long bean.

AVON, ILL.—Schuyler C. Case is completing his range of houses and soon will be ready for business, growing plants for the wholesale trade.

LINCOLN, ILL.—Otto Heimbreiker, who for the past thirteen years has held a position with W. H. Gullett & Sons, will sever his connection with this firm October 1, having purchased a half interest in the greenhouse business conducted by Hans Smaltzl, the greenhouse being known as the West End Greenhouse.

A VISIT TO VINCENT'S.

Richard Vincent, Jr., & Son, gave a dahlia show at their farm September 19, at White Marsh, Md., which made even florists and growers open their eyes. Novices and uninitiated held their breath in amazement. Fully 250 were in attendance. In a root-packing shed, or a display hall, as it was called, were collected 10,000 magnificent blooms, including 265 varieties, and almost as many different shades and colors.

Florists of Baltimore, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, and other cities declared that they had not been aware that such a great floral treat was in store for them. When they entered the exhibition hall, which was artistically arranged to bring out the contrasting colors, they plainly and audibly showed their astonishment and delight. The Baltimore florists knew to some extent the treat that was in store for them, but were, however, surprised at the wonderful progress made by Messrs. Vincent.

The exhibition in the afternoon was for visiting florists. At night the neighbors drove for miles around to see the exhibit. Regret was expressed that the display was not held in Baltimore.

Mr. Vincent came to Baltimore, and accompanied his guests to Cowenton station, where they were met by large farm wagons and driven to his farm, upon reaching which luncheon was served, and a number of short speeches made. After the flowers had been inspected the guests were driven over the 225-acre farm, returning to the hall for ice-cream before leaving for the trains. Each person in leaving received a large bunch of dahlias.

The packing hall, which is a long, narrow building, made an ideal place for the exhibition. Great banks of dahlias, in myriad forms and colors extended the entire length of the building on each side. Down the center ran a mound of the same varied beauty. All the colors and combinations were represented.

Altogether forty acres on the Vincent farm are in blooming dahlias. Mr. Vincent and one of his sons make a trip to Europe every year and select choice novelties.

The Vincents now have forty novelties. They expect to ship 300,000 dahlia roots by next spring. In addition to this, they expect to ship 20,000,000 cabbage, beet and celery plants this season. Ten acres are now in cabbage plants, and many orders for these are coming from the south. Thirty acres are also devoted to vegetable plants.

For winter cultivation, three and a half acres are under glass, heated by six Furman boilers so coupled that any number of the six can be used at one time. Messrs. Vincent propagate 2,000,000 geranium plants, said to be the largest collection in the world. They had 100 new varieties of geraniums for 1906, all imported from Europe.

The speechmaking in the display hall was conducted by W. L. Amoss, director of the Farmers' Institutes of Maryland.

Mr. Vincent welcomed the guests, and bid them enjoy themselves. He referred with feeling to the fact that one of his sons, who had set his heart upon the exhibition, had been critically ill, but was slowly recovering.

Much good feeling was aroused by the speeches which followed. Miss Mildred

J. Campbell, of Baltimore, proposed a rising vote of thanks to Mrs. Vincent for the splendid luncheon. Mrs. Mack Richmond also spoke a few words in appreciation on behalf of the ladies present.

Speeches also were made by Peter Bisset, president of the Florists' Club of Washington; Patrick O'Mara, Jersey City, N. J.; Edwin Lonsdale, of Girard College, Philadelphia; J. J. Perry, of Baltimore; Charles L. Seybold, superintendent of Patterson park, Baltimore; H. J. Patterson, of the Maryland Experiment Station; T. B. Symons, of the Maryland State Horticultural Society; William F. Gude, Washington, D. C., and others.

At the conclusion of the speechmaking three rousing cheers were given Mr. Vincent.

Griffith & Turner Co. gave an exhibition at one of the lily ponds with a gasoline engine in which the guests took much interest. Twelve hundred gallons of water were pumped in an hour by a one and one-half horse-power engine.

GLEN COVE, L. I.

The regular monthly meeting of the Nassau County Horticultural Society was held at the Oriental Hotel September 13. Twenty-six members were present. W. Parish, of Westbury, was elected a member. Six nominations for membership were made.

Points were awarded as follows: F. Mense, of Glen Cove, 91%, for a dish of Souvenir de Congress pears; S. J. Trepass, 83%, muskmelon, celery and handsome white grapes; H. F. Meyers, 79%, for carnations and roses; D. O'Brien, 74½%, for single dahlias.

James Duthie won the first prize, a box of cigars, for best vase of single dahlias. Albert Johnson won a prize box of cigars for the best vase of cactus dahlias. James Duthie won a box of cigars for the best vase of double dahlias.

Buell Davis, of the Glen Cove Echo, offered a fountain pen valued at $5 for best collection of six varieties of outdoor flowers shown at next regular meeting. Mr. Janiche, with John Lewis Childs, of Floral Park, offered a box of cigars for the best collection of outdoor flowers, number unlimited. Charles Lenker, of Freeport, offered a prize for the best collection of indoor chrysanthemums.

Plans were discussed for the annual flower show, to be held at Pembroke hall, October 31 and November 1. The next meeting will be held Wednesday, October 10.

MILWAUKEE.

The Picnic.

The picnic given on the grounds of the C. C. Pollworth Co. to the trade in this city was one of the largest attended affairs of this kind ever given here, some 200 persons being present. W. A. Kennedy, superintendent of the Pollworth greenhouse department, looked after the arrangements for the picnic on the grounds, and everyone who attended had an enjoyable time. Herman V. Hunkel took charge of the prize events and the following list was the result:

Men's race—C. Dalwig's prizes, A. Peterson first, C. Dettman second.

Ladies' race—Holton & Hunkel's prizes, Miss Kennedy first, Miss Hunkel second.

Girls' race—W. A. Kennedy's prizes, Miss Kennedy first, Miss Husslein second.

Girls' race, under 12—F. Pollworth's prizes, G. Baumgarten first, Hilda Menger second.

Boys' race—Hunkel's Seed Store prizes, J. Klokner first, A. Menger second.

Three-legged race—Holton & Hunkel's prizes, Kuhl and G. Manke first, Welke and W. Manke second.

Sack race—Chas. Menger's prizes, A. Rice first, H. Welke second.

Hurdle race—Holton & Hunkel's prizes, G. Ruesch first, W. Kuhl second.

Potato race—C. C. Pollworth's prizes, Mrs. Wolf first, Miss Hunkel second.

Peanut race—Nic Zweifel's prizes, Miss Potzwald first.

Tug of war—John G. Heltman's prize, the team captained by A. Klokner easily defeated the team captained by F. Kalsér, although the latter team was far the heavier.

Various Notes.

Visitors in town during fair week were: Arthur Peterson, Escanaba, Mich.; John Rindfleisch, Beloit, Wis.; A. E. Lutey, Houghton, Mich.; Wm. King, Antigo, Wis.; Edw. TWIN CITIES.

The Market.

Trade is improving fast, and while it is not as busy as later in the fall, our dull season is about over. Funeral work is the main issue, and we have had a great deal of it of late. Flowers for social functions are more in demand, indicating the return of society people to their winter homes.

Stock is somewhat scarce, principally carnations, and we can hardly expect many for some time, judging from the appearances of the different houses. Roses are doing surprisingly well, and the different growers are to be complimented on their present looks; unless things take a decided change a great many will be cut in the Twin Cities this season. Killarney seems to be the most satisfactory pink, although great hopes are held for the Moulton, which seems to be growing in favor. Richmonds are coming in nicely and good stock is sold quite readily at $2 per dozen, other varieties, including Chatenay at $1.50 per dozen. Beauties are commanding from $5 to $8 for the best stock. Asters have been a drug for some time. Private parties have sold many to the dealers, which hurt the growers.

St. Paul.

L. L. May & Co. have made a great many improvements in their store, one in particular being an apartment for design work, which has so far proved to be an excellent idea.

Holm & Olson have not yet moved into the new store, but will be there soon. They have installed a fine new ice-box.

E. F. Lemke has done considerable building at his Snelling avenue plant, and now has a modern lot of houses there. Alfred Lemke, who was for a number of years in the business here, and who later was located in Sioux City, Ia., is now located in Minneapolis, but makes his home here.

It is reported that S. D. Dysinger, late of Sears, Roebuck & Co., Chicago, has accepted a position with Holm & Olson.

John A. May, of L. L. May & Co., has returned from a trip to Toronto and Montreal.

Minneapolis.

Donaldson's Glass Block is making a great many improvements in the cut flower department, the main one being the building of an ice-box between fifty and sixty feet long.

The Powers Mercantile Co. is having a good trade, not only in cut flowers, but also in bulbs.

Amundson & Kirschner, the new florists on Hennepin avenue, between Fourth and Fifth streets, say that trade is good for a starter. Oscar has a great many friends and a good following, so that they will undoubtedly do well. Mr. Kirschner comes from Helena, Mont., and has been in the business all his life so that they should make a winning team.

Whitted now has one of the most attractive stores in this section. The fixtures are mahogany, and the place has an oriental effect, which is completed by the oriental rugs on the floors. Business in the new location is good.

ANTHERS IN LILIES.

I noted at a recent exhibition some exhibits were disqualified because the anthers had been removed from the lilies. Now, had any of our London florists shown and used lilies they would most certainly have fallen into the same error. Where flowers are shown for their own value alone, it is undoubtedly better that they should be shown without having been mutilated (as the R. H. S. authorities term the removal of the anthers). Yet for all floral work it is as necessary to remove the anthers to give the flowers a clean appearance, as it is for a man to shave his face. The R. H. S. council made it a rule a few years ago that in ordinary exhibits the anthers should not be removed from lilies, and this restriction has prevented one of the largest market growers from exhibiting; the manager explained to me that the blooms would be practically valueless for market if so shown. It is a practice with all growers who send to Covent Garden market to remove the anthers, and if any are seen with anthers on them, it is evidence that they have opened since they were cut, and are not fresh. Only the other morning I noticed a coster carrying out a large armful of longiflorum, and I was surprised, but a second glance proved that they were not fresh cut, from the fact that many of the flowers had the anthers on them.

I would further point out that any one having to depend upon the market for flowers for floral arrangements could not compete unless he could order the flowers specially for the purpose, and then the pollen would have quite spoiled the appearance of the blooms. In conclusion, I may say that when flowers are shown for their own merit alone, it may be quite right to insist on them being shown as they grow; yet when used for decorative effect anything superfluous may be removed, especially if it is going to disfigure the flowers.—Horticultural Advertiser.

BENTON HARBOR, MICH.—A. R. Arford, 414 Pipestone street, has a new aster, white with the outside petals tipped with red.

UNION CITY, TENN.—J. K. Postma has added another house 10x100. He says the farmers all are prosperous, and in his locality that insures good business this fall and winter.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.—September 18 the Phoenix Nursery Co. opened its downtown flower store, under the management of Fred H. Rowe. The establishment is up to date in every feature and there is every prospect of a good business being done.

Pres., Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va.; First Vice-Pres., Charles Burge, Toledo, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kandel, Cleveland. The 26th annual meeting will be held at New York City, June, 1907.

THE Japanese lily bulbs are arriving in good shape.

H. E. FISKE Co., Boston, opened for business September 19 in the store occupied by W. W. Rawson & Co. prior to the fire.

THE Holmes Seed Co., Harrisburg, Pa., is giving its third annual dahlia show this week and attracting many visitors to its store.

SONDEREGGER & Co., Beatrice, Neb., have embarked in the field seed and feed business. The senior partner is a well-known nurseryman there.

THERE were 308 bags of French seeds on the Bordeaux, from Havre, arriving at New York September 21, 138 packages being for J. M. Thorburn & Co.

THE exports of seeds other than grass, cotton and flax were as follows in the last three years: $238,770 in 1903, $240,262 in 1904 and $317,554 in 1905.

M. MATHERS, near Page Center, Ia., who is a contract grower for the A. A. Berry Seed Co., Clarinda, says the corn crop is a banner one in his section, both for quantity and quality.

THE Gurney Seed Co., Yankton, S. D., has been incorporated, with $10,000 authorized capital, to conduct a wholesale business. The incorporators are W. and D. B. Gurney, of Yankton, and E. R. Gurney, of Fremont, Neb.

THE main offices of the Rogers Bros.' Seed Co. will be moved from Chaumont, N. Y., to Alpena, Mich. The company is now erecting an addition to the elevator and sorting warehouse on Fair avenue, at Alpena, to be used as office quarters.

THE Jerome B. Rice Seed Co., Cambridge, N. Y., about ten days ago sent out its annual estimate of the onion crop. The total acreage is placed at 18,194 as against 17,231 last year; the crop at 4,955,277 bushels as against 4,311,000 bushels in 1905. But in the past week several newspapers in the onion districts have been busy calling attention to the fact that the local acreage and product will be considerably above the Rice estimate.

GERMAN SEED CROPS.

Although reports have been coming in from all sides about great heat and drought, we have had at Erfurt moist and cool weather all the time, so that the ground lost earlier in the season has not been made up.

Peas, especially wrinkled ones, will want a good deal of picking, and some disease has appeared among the lettuces.

Mangels are also unsatisfactory, but onions, leeks, cabbages, swedes, etc., are good, and carrots very good. Beans are much behind, but look all right up to date.

As regards flower seeds, the situation has not altered much. Our hopes for a warm August were not fulfilled, and so the later flowering annuals have to be marked with a note of interrogation. It is too late for sweet peas to recover, as if they fail to set at the right time, they will not do it afterwards. Asters are thin in places, but a warm autumn will help the crop considerably. We have now had a few sunny days so that our hopes rise with the thermometer.

A good many visitors, both from America and England, have been round of late, mostly on the lookout for novelties.—H. T. J.

CLOVER SEED.

The Indiana clover seed growers have had a bad season. W. V. Dorsey, at Shelbyville, estimates the crop at only one-half normal. The local price is $6.50 per bushel. At Princeton, Strain Bros. say the crop is an average one. Bingham Bros., of Patoka, delivered to them 160 bushels, September 19, being a normal yield from their acreage. Prices range from $6 to $6.65.

GRASS SEED REPORTS.

A. Ea Coq & Co., Darmstadt, Germany, report as follows under date of September 11:

We have this year to report on a later crop of grass seeds than has been the case for some years past and even now it is impossible to form a definite opinion on some species. This season has shown again, that a luxuriant growth of the plants in spring does not yet furnish proof of a full crop of seed. The always changing temperature in spring has acted badly upon the formation of seeds of some grasses and the yield has been disappointing.

If the present fine warm weather continues we shall have a good crop of German Agrostis stolonifera and we expect to see somewhat lower prices for this species.

Aira flexuosa has been harvested in somewhat larger quantities but again contains much chaff and prices for fancy grades will probably not be lower.

The first reports on Alopecurus pratensis were very favorable. One was looking for a good quality of seed at moderate prices. Now things seem to have changed; much of the seeds are found to be full of larvae and the crop is said to have been overestimated. A wild speculation has pushed prices to the extreme, but there is no knowing whether there will not be a relapse.

Again very little of Anthoxanthum odoratum has been brought in, but the quality is better than last season.

Cynosurus cristatus early in the season promised well, but the great expectations were doomed to disappointment. The quality so far looks all right.

We think some discretion is necessary as regards the buying of Dactylis glomerata.

There was a rumor of a small crop of Festuca durtuscula and ovina which, however, seems not to be the fact. We admit that the quality is inferior. What is known as Festuca arundinacea (elator) yielded a much better crop than last year and of good quality. The crop of Festuca ovina tennifolia is better than last year. Festuca rubra as well as Festuca heterophylla are deficient in quantity.

The changing temperature in spring has proved most fatal to the development of the seeds of Poa nemoralis. In some districts seed of an average quality has been harvested but most of the crop is light and contains much chaff. Poa trivialis has produced a good crop as regards quantity and quality and prices will be somewhat easier.

Not much can be said as regards alfalfa. France advises a small crop of fine quality as contrasted to Italy, which reports a somewhat larger crop but of inferior quality. True Turkestan alfalfa promises well as regards quality and quantity. To get perfectly clean and dodder-free seed it requires much machining and this and the great demand will again bring high prices.

Alsike seems to be an average crop everywhere and from samples to hand of good quality. The same applies to white clover and prices for this article are moderate and for inferior grades very low.

L. C. Nungesser, Greisheim, near Darmstadt, Germany, reports as follows under date of September 5:

The European crop of all grasses can be defined as satisfactory, so that prices are not higher, taken all around, than last year. American crops, however, are stated to have turned out less favorably, excepting Dactylis glomerata, which was cropped in good condition.

Australia yields also a medium crop in the latter kind.

Agrostis stolonifera, German creeping bent-grass, has a good crop of apparently good quality, prices ranging as last year. The accounts from America generally are not as favorable as for years and the prices quoted as yet are fairly high.

Alopecurus pratensis, the meadow foxtail, has not cropped up to expectations and prices are exceptionally high, such as only a very short crop would warrant.

Dactylis glomerata, orchardgrass or cocksfoot, as already stated, America has a good crop and is in a position, for the first time for years, to export. Only a small percentage, however, is fit for export to Europe as the qualities generally are not sufficiently clean, although the color is bright. New Zealand seed, on the contrary, is perfect in respect of color and purity, but the percentage of germination is somewhat below that of former years. The European crop cannot compete with the above produces, being too insignificant in quantity and quality.

Festuca pratensis, meadow fescue, is stated to have yielded poorly in America and high prices are asked. As considerable stock is left over from last year, buyers will do well to be cautious. The crop of Festuca elatior arundinacea, tall fescue, that excellent grass so much in request, is reported to be plentiful and good and prices will doubtless range lower than last season.

Poa pratensis, the smoothstalked meadow-grass, has cropped poorly as far as can be gathered from the reports to date, and quotations are unusually high. It remains to be seen whether buyers will not hold back in the face of such high prices, especially as the seed is one pound per bushel lighter than in 1905.

Poa trivialis, roughstalked meadowgrass, has become so necessary for certain soils that it has maintained its price easily for years and it is not likely that values will waive much this year in spite of the reported good yield.

Timothy is stated to be a short crop and opening prices are much higher than usual. It remains to be seen whether they can be kept up.

It is too early to report definitely concerning clovers generally. Particularly is this the case with red clover and alsike. The development takes place in September, but the prospects in Europe are excellent for all sorts. Bad accounts have just come to hand concerning the results of the crops of alfalfa. The yield is said to turn out very poor, so that at the best the same prices as last year may be expected. Those cropped up to date, such as Medicago lupulina, yellow trefoil, yielding well in choice quality; Hedysarum onobrychis, the simple sainfoin, which is far behind last year's quality and short in crop, and Trifolium repens, the white clover, yielding a full crop of prime quality, will not be offered in bulk for some weeks.

Trifolium incarnatum, crimson clover, also yields well, but prices do not coincide, being fairly high and I am of opinion that more favorable quotations will rule during the winter.

EUROPEAN NOTES.

The exporting of bulbs from Holland to all parts of the world has been finished for this season and a more healthy condition of trade than has been the case for some years is reported. Prices for most articles have been fully maintained and in many cases sharp advances have been made. Scarlet Duc tulips have maintained their top values and all other varieties of crimson, red or scarlet tulips have advanced rapidly in consequence. It was thought at one time that hyacinths would go cheaper and might probably leave a surplus but some heavy late orders quite did away with any fear. Crocuses have kept dearer than they have been for some years. There is no surplus of anything in the Dutch bulb line.

The Boskoop plant and shrub trade reports some good business. Especially is the increase of trade noticeable in roses for forcing. One firm, probably the largest grower of roses, reports having many inquiries and having booked some heavy orders, including one for 50,000 plants for an English firm. This is in marked contrast to the finish-up of the continental rose tree trade last spring, when plants were exceptionally cheap and plentiful.

The French bulb trade has not been so fortunate and, according to reports, no more than average sales in Roman hyacinths and other French articles have taken place, Lilium candidum being exceptionally slow in sale. Paper White

Comet Tomato

Those who force tomatoes should give "Comet" a trial. This variety has been the talk of gardeners around Boston the past season. Those who have seen it growing declare there's nothing to compare with it. Seed, $5.00 per oz.

narcissi, largely grown in France and also in Italy, has not, I think by reports, made an average sale and the same applies to freesias. In Italy, at least, some big surpluses of these two lines are found and not likely to be moved now. Following upon the rapid rise in price of Paper White narcissi consequent upon the eruption of Vesuvius, a big drop now has occurred, both in these and in freesias. Some good orders are reported, both in Holland and England, for herbaceous peonies, Duchess de Nemours and Festiva maxima taking the first place as the leading, most useful and popular white varieties. Especially is this the case with continental growers, who offer these two sorts much cheaper than the few English growers.

The firms engaged in exporting lily of the valley from Germany have hardly got into the business of booking orders for autumn delivery. The trade in this line hardly shapes itself for an accurate estimate until samples are ready to be submitted to customers, which will not occur until October; but still according to what orders are already taken, the trade in pips bids fair to be a long way above the average and an advance in price already is occurring. The stock of retarded pips is well cleaned up and the quantity left in storage, both in England and Germany, is hardly sufficient to carry supplies on until the fresh crowns come into use. This will tend to make a much heavier demand for fresh crowns than would otherwise be the case. Fortunately the supply will be larger, one firm recently writing me that it will have double last year's supply.

TOPEKA, KAN.

Wants S. A. F. Convention.

The secretary of the Commercial Club soon will lay before the entertainment committee of the club the proposition that they tender an invitation to the Society of American Florists to hold its annual convention here. The society has a membership of 1,000 and the convention would be a great thing for Topeka. The club notes that the S. A. F. has been holding its meetings in the east and will meet next year at Philadelphia and the next at Chicago but this year at the convention at Dayton there was talk of in the future holding the convention in smaller places.

If an invitation is sent from here it will probably be for 1909 or 1910, so that any new ideas absorbed by the Topeka people may be put in beautifying the city for the semi-centennial....

WARREN, O.—Thomas H. Phelan left town Monday, September 3, and since then has not been heard from. Some uneasiness is felt about his whereabouts, and efforts are being made to locate him. Mr. Phelan is a prominent member of the local order of the Eagles.

The Florists' Manual

We note your advertisement in a recent number of the REVIEW of the second edition of Scott's Florists' Manual, and request that you enter our order for a copy of this valuable book. The writer is thoroughly acquainted with the first edition of this work, having often had occasion to use it for reference while a student at the Michigan Agricultural College. Please rush this order, for we feel, with Mark Twain, that we "would rather not use violence."

The Market.

Owing to Jewish New Year's, which always brings out a good demand for flowers, and also to several good decorations, the last week was a busy one, and all enjoyed a good business. The demand for flowers of all grades was the best we have had this year. Good prices prevailed, too, Beauties especially reaching the high-water mark for this year.

We are having ideal fall weather, which includes those cool, crisp nights which always have such a good effect upon all kinds of greenhouse stock. The cuts from all of the growers in these parts are showing the benefits of this weather, and the general improvement will gradually be followed by a rise in the price. What is most needed now to give a tone to the market is a good, heavy frost. With the outdoor flowers out of the way, the business would immediately take a brace.

This market is now supplied with all the staple varieties of flowers. Carnations, which as yet are scarcely up to standard, are improving rapidly, and within a couple of weeks we will have some good stock. Roses, too, are beginning to show signs of winter quality.

Beauties are especially good. The first mums were received September 19, and outside of being a little soft, they were good and sold readily. They were grown by the H. Weber & Sons Co., of Oakland, Md. It will not be long till the mum will be with us in force and will really mark the opening of the fall business. Outdoor stock such as asters, gladioli, tuberose, dahlias and cosmos are with us and sell fairly well. Smilax has been a little scarce but there has been plenty of asparagus, ferns, etc.

Various Notes.

The last flower show held during the fall festival took place September 20.
As announced in my notes of last week,
W. K. Partridge was given a contract to make the exhibit. He put up an exhibition on similar lines to the one he showed two weeks before, and again it drew forth the admiration of the thousands of people. The attendance was much larger than at the first show, as the exhibit was better advertised, and everyone seemed greatly pleased with what he saw. Orchids, American Beauties, and mums were used in profusion.

A sneak-thief tapped the till in J.
O'Malley's flower store and made away with about $15. He did not get far before he was caught; the money was found on him.

H. Schlachter has just about completed the erection of two greenhouses, 18x135 feet at St. Bernard, O. He intends doing a general retail business.

MOBILE, ALA.

Business rapidly is picking up after a long and rather dull summer. There is little cut flower business doing here in the heated term, but the busy seasons rapidly are growing in volume of business and somewhat in length of the season.

The recent opening of the Cawthorn hotel brought considerable business to the local florists, not only in decorations for the hotel, but in floral tributes sent by those interested. C. Ravier & Sons had an order from the Mobile Transfer Co., for whom they made a wreath standing four feet high without the easel. The material was roses, dahlias, asters, and asparagus, and the piece attracted much attention at the opening.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYIMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas. C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

THE West Virginia Experiment Station recently has published a bulletin setting forth the results of tests of sprays for San Jose scale. In each case Target Brand scale destroyer proved most effective.

F. T. HAZELTINE, proprietor of the Crookston Nurseries, Crookston, Minn., recently has returned from a trip through North Dakota. He reports the region exceptionally prosperous and much interest being taken in tree planting.

THE annual inspection of nurseries in Pennsylvania is progressing, and conditions are reported more satisfactory than ever before. The state is divided into three inspection districts. Chief Inspector Engle has charge of the western district, D. K. McMillan of the central district, and T. C. Lefevre of the eastern.

THE WEDGE NURSERY, Albert Lea, Minn., does the very best kind of advertising at the local fair. Last year in their booth practical demonstrations were given as to how apples should be picked, packed and marketed. This year the lessons were in grafting, budding, pruning and other practical operations. The farmers are eager to learn.

ALTHOUGH the fruit shipments from California to eastern points have been 958 cars short this year in comparison with the shipments of 1905, still the fact that the fruit was better matured and of better quality than usual has caused higher prices, and the financial returns to the fruit growers of the state will be greater than in 1905. All shipments except pears sold well at top market prices.

PEONY LADY A. DUFF.

The following letter from Kelway & Son, of Longport, Somerset, received by the REVIEW, will be read with much interest by the trade, inasmuch as it contains the originator's description of Peony Lady Alexandra Duff, even though the writers fail to state to whom in America they have sent true stock. The communication is as follows:

We beg to state that Peony Lady Alexandra Duff was a seedling raised by us some sixteen years ago at our Langport nurseries. It flowered sufficiently strong to be exhibited in the years 1891 and 1892, and in the latter year was named and received the first-class certificate of the Royal Botanic Society of London. It was catalogued by us in 1893, and offered by us retail at 7s. 6d. each. It always has been greatly in demand, owing to its extreme beauty, robustness, and fragrance, and although the price was advanced so high as 21s. each (retail) in 1902, 1903 and 1904, it became necessary to withdraw it from our lists in 1905, owing to the impossibility of keeping the supply on a level with the demand. We shall supply single plants only during the coming season. It is French or blush white with a soupçon of cream color; very tall, handsome, large, and sweet; as stated in our last, it was in flower with us this season.

KELWAY & SON.

STOCK FOR STANDARD ROSES.

In the REVIEW of September 20, T. N. writes under the head of "Stock for Standard Roses," that Rosa canina is the only rose used for grafting in Scandinavia and Germany. But T. N. is mistaken, as I happen to be from Sweden and know the biggest rose growers there are unable to raise this variety on account of its lack of hardiness.

For the most part, our common wild rose, Rosa nitida, which grows in abundance, is employed. In October we used to go out in the woods and gather in all the stocks we needed, pot them up and begin grafting just as fast as they began to grow, which generally was in the middle of October.

Some years ago I saw in one of our western cities about a dozen standards grafted to our common prairie rose, Rosa setigera, and they had endured the winters perfectly for three years, although the temperature sometimes dropped down to 38 degrees below zero.

This summer I have seen another batch of standards grafted to both Rosa rugosa and R. setigera. The latter were by all means the strongest, both in growth and bloom. Now, both Rosa nitida and Rosa setigera grow in abundance in our states and I think they could be used with profit by our growers in competition with imported stocks. Stems three to five feet are not hard to get.

EVERGREENS FROM SEEDS.

Will some reader of the REVIEW please tell me the best way to succeed in raising from seeds out of doors in the south the following evergreens: Magnolia grandiflora, Magnolia fuscata, Camellia Japonica, arbovitæ, or biota. What is the best soil to start the seedlings?

J. N.

The raising of woody plants from seeds is quite a simple proposition where the seeds are handled properly, and where above all fresh and well-ripened seeds are used. For the seedbed select a level piece of land with good drainage, free from obnoxious weeds, and with a water supply of some kind handy.

Magnolia seeds are best planted as soon as ripe. When gathered, soak them until the fatty and pulpy red outer skin comes off, as when this skin is not removed the seeds will easily rot in the ground. If your ground is free from mice you can sow them at once, otherwise pack the seed away until spring by putting it between alternate layers of moist sand in boxes, flower pots or other receptacles. This will keep them fresh until early spring, when they ought to be sown in rows about six inches apart, and about one and a half to two inches between the seeds. They will soon germinate and be nice little stock by next fall.

Camellia Japonica seeds ought to be sown at once after ripening. Seedlings will hardly ever reproduce the mother plant, but will show new, and often good new varieties. The common way of propagation is by cuttings during the winter months, or by grafting.

Biota Orientalis seed may be planted in fall, or in early spring. It can be sown fairly close, and it will germinate quickly; with good seed a fine stand is assured.

It is advisable to cover the seedbeds after sowing with a good mulch, which must be removed when the seedlings begin to come up. For shade use frames made of building laths, or frames covered with burlap, or even brush. Get the seedlings accustomed gradually to the sun by raising the frames and then removing them during cloudy days, until you leave them off entirely.

When watering the seedlings, be careful not to swamp them out, but do not keep them too dry. Observation will prove the best teacher.

CYANIDE FOR SCALE.

I notice in your issue for July 12 Mr. Scott says that fumigation with cyanide has no effect on scale. I would like to know his reason for this statement, as all nurserymen are using it for San Jose scale in its most dormant state with perfect results. W. R. G.

My reason for stating that the fumes of cyanide of potash would not destroy scale was because the violet grower who first gave me the formula told me that it was death to any insect that had lungs, but on creatures without lungs it had no effect.

I am aware nurserymen fumigate trees and shrubs, but is it to destroy San Jose scale that they use cyanide? We thought sulphur was the base of the scale insecticides, as it is when houses are fumigated after a contagious disease, like diphtheria, scarlet fever, etc. If W. R. G. is sure that nurserymen use the cyanide fumigation on the trees and it destroys the scale I will be glad to acknowledge my error. W. S.

PACIFIC COAST.

STOCK PLANTS.

Insurance for Next Season.

As late as the end of September is the proper time to arrange to have stock plants to carry over for the coming season of all our hardy border plants. It happens every few years that there is no necessity to shelter plants at all from the frost, and in such cases the cuttings can be taken directly from the plants in the ground and rooted early in the spring. But we have no assurance that we shall escape frost and to be on the safe side, it is well to be prepared. I usually take cuttings from achyranthes, alternanthera, lobelia, geraniums, ageratum, begonias, heliotropes, and stock of this kind, at this season, and root them in a cool frame, well shaded.

Outdoor cuttings will be found to root much quicker when handled in this way than when put in a propagating house in the late summer or fall on account of the warm weather we usually experience at this time. Keep the cuttings well ventilated, and they will be rooted nicely by the time the cold weather arrives. They will not make much growth in a coldframe after that until very early in the spring, when they will suddenly commence to grow very rapidly. Then a second batch of cuttings should be taken, and these will root easily in a frame or under glass anywhere. In a couple of weeks these will be old enough to put outside, when all danger of frost is past, and the demand has commenced for the various kinds of bedding plants.

On the other hand, if stock plants are allowed to stand outside in the open all winter, and an effort is made early in the spring to propagate from the weak, stringy stems, it is almost impossible to get strong plants for the spring trade in time for general planting, and if the frost has been severe enough to kill all the stock plants in the open you will have to lay in a new supply.

Pansies that were sown in July should now be large enough to prick out into flats and removed to the open. This is the only way they can be made stocky enough to have them hold their own when the cold weather begins. They can be transplanted into the open ground about the end of October, and if the weather be at all favorable, a lot of good blooms can be had, commencing from the first of December. Pansies are gross feeders, more so than anything else in the line of border plants, and well-rotted manure should be freely spaded into the beds when they are planted.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Flowers of all descriptions are really scarce. We have almost nothing in the line of cheap stock to make any showing with at present. Asters are gone for the season. We have had about a week of steady drying winds and its effect has been disastrous to all kinds of outside stock. Sweet peas are usually at this season of the year in good shape but from various causes they are now both short of stem and poor of flower, and the stores are compelled to pay from 75 cents to $1 per dozen bunches for them. Inside roses are between seasons at present, and they continue very scarce and poor. There is absolutely no stock of anything in the line of fancy roses or carnations. Of the latter there is a very noticeable scarcity of good long-stemmed flowers. PORTLAND, ORE.

The Market.

The busy season has started right, and signs of prosperity are everywhere. September has wrought many changes; the summer absentees have returned to take up the strenuous life again, and after a long, hot, dry spell, a bountiful supply of rain has enriched vegetation and enlivened both man and beast. The late outdoor flowers promptly responded to the soothing effects of the rain, enabling us to pick another big crop of sweet peas, and a wealth of perfect asters.

Roses are showing up finely, but there are none too many. This is always our poorest month for carnations, being in a sense the season known to the farmer as "between hay and grass." A continuation of this fine fall weather for a few weeks and everything will be roseate. The volume of trade is all we can expect, and enough to use up all available material. We have not had so much funeral work in September for a number of years. Wedding orders, too, have been a feature of some magnitude.

Various Notes.

Sunday, September 16, was a glorious day, just the kind for an automobile ride; and where a few weeks previous we tramped through the suburban dust, we can now cover the same territory in much less time by the latest mode of transportation. Portland is certainly destined to become a great city, and we love to watch it develop. From a commercial standpoint, we have the necessary railroad and water facilities, and for the artistic, everything that can be desired. On our last Sunday's trip, we made Council Crest, the highest point of Portland Heights, 1,200 feet above the sea level, which has but recently been reached by electric car service. From this vantage point one has a magnificent view of a great country. Three snow-capped mountains are visible, Mt. St. Helen's and Mt. Adams at the north, and Mt. Hood, sixty miles to the east towering majestically above all. This beautiful panorama of nature is only one of the reasons why Portland Heights has become so desirable a residence district, and we were not surprised at the building activity. And what will it avail our profession? First, the landscape artist, then the nurseryman, and eventually the florist, will profit by this tide of progress. The slopes are gorgeous with autumn foliage, the trees donning their fall garments much earlier here than in the east. Especially is this so of the soft maple, which is extensively used by the florists in decorating for fall openings.

E. Gill, the well-known grower of hardy roses of Berkeley, Cal., accompanied by his son, is making his annual trip through the northwest, and reports a growing demand for his stock. H. J. M.

WILKERSON, WASH.—C. E. Duneer plans to remove to Minnesota in the spring and build a range of three or four houses.

A New Remarkable Carolina Mountain Plant

Stenanthium Robustum, or Mountain Feather Fleece

This remarkable hardy perennial is, without doubt, one of our best new introductions, and may be classed with the showiest of all herbaceous plants. As the buds begin to unfold in early August they are quite upright, and a light green tinge, gradually becoming whiter until at last they burst forth into a veritable snowbank of drooping, fleecy bloom of purest white, the panicles often 2 to 3 feet long. In September the flowers, as they ripen, turn to shades of pink and purple. It is a vigorous perennial, attaining a height of from 5 to 8 feet when well established, and is absolutely hardy throughout the United States and Canada. The Mountain Feather Fleece is of easy cultivation, and if given plenty of food, makes a wonderful show equaled by few plants of any description. The illustration gives some idea of the wonderful effect of Stenanthium when in full bloom but inadequately conveys the beauty of the delicate, feathered, drooping flowers. When known will be planted by thousands.

STREATOR, ILL.

Work on the greenhouses of George A. Whitcomb and George G. Whitcomb, father and son, rapidly is progressing. The packing shed, which is a frame building 20x64 feet, is completed. The smokestack for the boiler-room, which is of brick, has been finished and is sixty-two feet high. The boiler-room, work on which will be commenced in a few days, will be of sufficient size for at least three eighty-horsepower boilers, two of which are to be set this fall.

Eight greenhouses are to be erected this fall. All will be of the same size, 15x300 feet. A carload of glass and a carload of other material already have arrived.

It is proposed to raise cucumbers exclusively the coming winter. Next winter tomatoes undoubtedly will be added. Most of the vegetables raised will be shipped to Chicago and other outside markets. The switch laid for the Streator Metal Stamping Company has already been extended to accommodate the new industry.

It is expected that eight more greenhouses, the same size as the ones built this year, will be added next summer. Another eighty-horsepower boiler is also to be added.

SPRINGFIELD, MO.

Articles of incorporation have been filed for the Pioneer Floral Co., with a capitalization of $5,000. The stockholders are L. H. Murray, R. R. Ricketts, W. D. Murray, W. J. Schaffitzel, and A. L. Murray.

The new concern has purchased the greenhouse and stock of Ed Quinn, and will consolidate it with the greenhouses of the Springfield Seed Co. W. J. Schaffitzel will have charge of the greenhouses. Mr. Schaffitzel's long experience in Germany and America amply fit him for his new position. Several additional buildings will be erected on New street. The company owns a lot 150x180 feet, in connection with the Quinn greenhouse, on which will be built at once houses which will double the present capacity of the latter. A handsome park will be laid out in grass, walks and flower beds next spring.

MABELLE

NEW PINK CARNATION FOR 1907

Color—A peculiar shade of lovely pink, with a faint yellowish cast; several shades lighter than the Lawson. Unlike most pinks, the brightest sun does not injure the color. Size—3 to 4 inches in diameter when established. Odor—Pleasing, but not strong. Stems—Invariably strong, but always graceful, ranging from 12 to 30 inches during the season. Habit, etc.—A very quick, active grower, making specimen plants in a short time, even from late cuttings. On account of its rapid growth, requires supporting very soon after benching. Gets away rapidly, blooms early and gives long stems right from the start. Productiveness—Prodigious is the best word we know of to use here. It is the most incessant bloomer, early and late, we have ever grown. Stock limited. Delivery January 6 to 10 and later. Price $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

WASHINGTON.

The Florists' Club has set an example which is expected to appeal to many other bodies of business men in the city, by adopting resolutions commendatory of the Greater Washington movement, and making a cash contribution to the cause which the Jobbers' and Shippers' Association is pressing.

This action was entirely voluntary, and no inkling of it was conveyed to the headquarters of the jobbers and shippers until the following letter was received:

To the Secretary of the Shippers' and Jobbers' Association.

Dear Sir: At a meeting of the Florists' Club the following resolution was offered by Z. D. Blackstone:

Whereas, the Florists' Club of Washington, D. C., has noted the strenuous and persistent efforts of the Jobbers' and Shippers' Association, in furtherance of a Greater Washington, be it therefore Resolved, That the said Florists' Club does hereby extend to the said Jobbers' and Shippers' Association its congratulations and sincere good wishes upon its undertaking in the laudable project, and furthermore begs to assure the said Jobbers' and Shippers' Association of its co-operation and support.

Inclosed is a check for $10 for membership fee for the Florists' Club of Washington, D. C. CHARLES McCauley, Sec'y.

It is believed that the example thus set by the florists will be copied by the various organizations of retail dealers in the city, and that along with them the various improvement associations will realize that the Greater Washington movement is the most comprehensive plan for securing the benefits which they desire. Thus, through a federation of interests it is believed much wider expansion will be secured.

NORTHERN TEXAS.

Cool nights and fine days are doing much in this section just now. Carnations are all housed and growing nicely. Trade is beginning to pick up very satisfactorily.

There is a large amount of funeral work being done at Sherman by H. O. Hannah & Son.

H. Kaden, of Gainesville, has some fine stock. His carnations are the finest I have seen in years.

Miss Mangum, of Sherman, reports business picking up satisfactorily.

Messrs. Gorman and Majors, of Denison, are putting their place in fine shape.

The Market.

The outlook is bright for a good fall business, as all stock is developing in fine shape. While there is not any strictly fancy stock on the market at present, all is of fair quality. The time will be short, however, until stock will be good.

Trade the past week has been fair, and showing some gain each day, though we cannot look for anything substantial until we get rid of the outdoor stock, and already we notice a shortening. It has been wet for a few days, and at present we are having fall weather, which we trust will continue, as it has had a bracing effect on the market and stock in general.

Beauties continue to improve, so that at present there is some remarkably good stock to be had. The demand is strong, and supply hardly equal to the call. They run from $1 to $3 wholesale. Brides and Maids still are small in flower, and short in stem, but, with continued cool weather, will be much improved. Chatenay is a little more plentiful. Liberty and Richmond are abundant but not so much in demand, as it is a little too early for the roses to show quality. Carnations are improving. The stems are lengthening, especially in whites. Enchantress and Lawson are short, and not many of them, though the flowers are good, and find a ready sale. Asters are not so plentiful, but there are still enough to go around, and will be until the frost nips them. Dahlias are deteriorating in quality, and it is only a question of a few days when the frost will settle them also.

Various Notes.

Philip Scott has returned from Buffalo.

Among the recent visitors was P. R. Quinlan, of Syracuse, N. Y.

Several events are set for next week, the principal one being the banquet by the Chamber of Commerce to Vice-President Fairbanks, at the Brown Palace hotel. The decorations are expected to be fine.

The Florists' Bowling league has called a meeting of its members to get ready for the winter season. E. S. K.

ARAUCARIAS, the best decorative plants Nature produces, our specialty.

Every man in business and life, to be successful, must adopt one thing as his specialty and that specialty, of whatever nature it may be, he must guard, study and push to such an extent that it not only benefits himself but he must continue it so every one who seeks his aid, services or his article, which he advertises or practices, will share a slice of his activity and prosperity. I made the importation and cultivation of araucarias a special study in my life. The figures below will show my success in business from the first year; by commencing with an importation of 250 and now, the eleventh year, my importation has grown up to 6,000 (come and see it), the reason being that the araucaria grows yearly more in favor with the plant consuming people all over the country, as a most admired decorative plant for the parlor, bed-room, dining and sitting-rooms, stores and hotels, lawns and porches. The outlook will be of an importation of at least 8,000 to 10,000 in spring of 1907. To secure this vast amount for 1907, I left Hoboken Aug. 15, striking for Belgium, to make contracts for next year. I shall also bring over with me at the same time a large lot of choice Azalea Indica and Palma, etc., for Christmas and Easter forcing. No money will be spared to secure for my customers the cream of the Belgium greenhouses only.

Please note lowest prices for September.

Araucaria Excelsa, 12 to 14 inches high, 5½-in. pots 3 to 4 tiers, 2 yrs. old, 50c. 14 to 16 inches high 5½ in. pots, 3 to 4 tiers, 2 yrs. old, 60c. 16 to 18 inches high 5½ to 6-in. pots, 4 to 5 tiers, 3 yrs. old, 75c. 18 to 20 inches high, 6-in. pots 5 to 6 tiers, 4 yrs. old, $1.00. 20 to 24 inches high, 6-in. pots, 5 to 6 tiers, 4 yrs. old $1.25. 26 to 30 inches high, specimens, 7-in. pots, 6 yrs. old, $2.50 to $3.00.

Araucaria Compacta Robusta, have 1000 of them. Never were they as nice as this year. Plants are as broad as long, from 12 to 20 inches in height, 3 to 4 perfect tiers, 20 to 30 inches across from tip of one tier to the other, 3, 4 and 5 yrs. old 6 to 7-in. pots, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75 to $2.00, up to $1.00 each.

Araucaria Excelsa Glauca, perfect jewels in shape and size, their beautiful greenish blue tiers give them such a striking appearance, that anyone seeing them must fall in love with them on sight. Plants, 6 to 7 in. pots, 3, 4, 5 perfect tiers, 15 to 25 inches in height, from 15 to 30 inches across, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75, $2.00 to $2.50 each. Please bear in mind that the above mentioned varieties are the cream of Belgium's productions. We have thousands of them and can meet all demands.

Kentia Belmoreana, 6-in. pots, 4-year-old, 5 to 6 leaves, bushy, 30 to 35 inches high, $1.25; 5½ to 6-in. pots, 3-year-old, 5 to 6 leaves, 75c to $1.00 each. These are the sizes entered in the customs house.

All goods must travel at purchaser's risk. Cash with order, please.

Greenhouse Heating.

RIDGE AND FURROW RANGE.

I see in the REVIEW some very interesting articles on steam and hot water heating of greenhouses. I intend to change my system from gravity to the use of a steam trap and would like to know what is the best plan? Our houses run east and west, 14x120, all connected as one large room, no partitions; six feet headroom at the lower end of the gutter; about seven feet at the higher end. Our boiler is in a pit six feet deep. Our radiation pipes at present are high above the beds. I wish to put them underneath. Our boiler is located at the northwest corner. There is about eighteen inches slope of the ground towards the boiler.

Is it better to run a riser or main under each ridge to the east end, and then lower, divide and return under the benches? Or divide the radiation as soon as it comes in, right at the west end, and join the pipes at the east end into two returns, and return to the condensation tank? How many lineal feet of 1 1/4-inch pipe will be required to heat the plant in weather 10 degrees below zero?

I prefer not to run a riser if it can be avoided. I would much rather distribute the steam direct from the main at the west end, and connect the pipes at the farthest end into two returns, if this will work.
 P. B.

Can you not lower your boiler so as to maintain the plant on a gravity system? If you can it will save much trouble.

I am sorry I cannot commend the plan of piping you prefer. It has been a regret to have to remodel several houses piped as you suggest because it was impossible to maintain the temperature in the two ends of the houses within 15 degrees to 20 degrees the same. No difficulty in this respect, however, ever has been experienced when a riser was carried under the ridge to the most distant point in the plant and the division to supply the radiation made at that place.

You neglected to state the number of houses in your range. I can, therefore, only state the requirements of a single house. In computing the requirements for a ridge and furrow plant such as you have it is our practice to deduct a percentage from the radiation as computed for independent houses, which I cannot

This is a sample of letters we receive from our customers. "Burns Boiler Co., Green Bay, Wis. Dear Sirs: Replying to your letter of the 2nd inst., regarding your Eclipse Boiler I installed in my greenhouses two years ago, will say that the boiler is giving me best of satisfaction. At the same time I installed your boiler, I built an addition to my greenhouses with about 3000 sq. ft. of glass, and the first winter I saved $75.00 in fuel. This is a very large saving when you consider that I heated 3000 sq. ft. additional glass and at the same time saved $75.00 on fuel, and if I were to install another boiler, I certainly would have no other than your Eclipse." LINCOLN, ILL., January 8, 1906.

GENTLEMEN:—You can strongly and unhesitatingly recommend the "Eclipse" piston type reducing valve to florists. We have two purchased of you last year. We would not have them out for double their cost and find them as sensitive as a watch. We will be in Chicago soon to take up the vacuum system with you.

do in this case because the number of houses is not stated.

It will be a safe plan to run a 2-inch riser under the ridge of each house and return by seven 1 1/4-inch pipes in each of the inside houses and eight 1 1/4-inch pipes in each of the outside houses; i. e., in the houses having the exposed outer wall, locate the extra pipe in each case near the exposed wall.
 L. C. C.

HOUSE ON SIDE HILL.

We have a side hill facing the south which could be trimmed down to an angle of 32 degrees, the same pitch as the greenhouse roof. The house is to be 60x100, rafters six and one-half feet from the ground. It will be ventilated on the north and on the south side by sashes in the wall. Coldframes running along the south side will give additional support to the house. The heating will have to come mostly from the lower end. How should we pipe for best results, using a combination, steam and hot water? The house is to be used for forcing early vegetables from February 1 to May 30, the outdoor temperature going 10 degrees below zero at times. A ten horse-power return tubular boiler will be used. Will it be large enough?

 A. M.

Thirty-two degrees is a good angle for a house to be used for forcing vegetables during the season mentioned in the latitude of Ohio.

If you wish to use a combination heating system, I think it would be well to locate the boiler in the center of the lower side and carry the main supply pipe through an alley running up the hill through the middle of the house. The flow pipe can be arranged, say two feet off the ground, and the return on the surface of the ground. For a riser use 4-inch pipe for the first thirty feet and 3-inch the rest of the way. Place a tee in the main flow, so as to allow for carrying a branch flow in each direction from the main flow under each bench. If there are eight benches and 1½-inch pipe is used for radiation, a 2-inch secondary flow or riser and two 1½-inch returns should be provided under each of the eight benches. It is possible that you can successfully heat the house with the ten horse-power boiler, but it is risky and I should prefer at least a fifteen horse-power boiler for the work.

L. C. C.

POOR CIRCULATION.

I have a carnation house 16x100 feet that does not heat well. It has 4-foot side walls and glass in the south end above the wall, nine feet to ridge. The west side, south end and one-half of the east wall are exposed. At first the house was only fifty feet long and had one flow and three returns on each side. A few years ago it was extended fifty feet more and without disturbing the piping already in, they put in another flow the entire length and six returns back to the center of the house, where they all entered one pipe, and back to the boiler through it. Both sides of the house are piped alike and all of 2-inch pipe. The local plumber did the work for us, and it has a rise of twenty-five inches in the 100 feet. What can I do? S. M.

If you are to modify the piping in your carnation house I would suggest the following: That the present double system be replaced by a single 3-inch riser and that eight 2-inch returns be provided the length of the house. The present piping is inadequate for the house and not well arranged. The circulation is too much impeded by the present arrangement of pipes. Place the expansion tank as high up as possible and make the connection to the expansion tank on the main return close to the boiler.

BURNER FOR GAS.

The inquiry of B. & S. in the REVIEW of September 20 attracted my attention. I have a good thing, and having in the past had lots of bad luck with my heating apparatus, have a desire to render anyone any aid in my power, toward the right road. In 1903 my plant froze twice in one month on account of a defective heater, and therefore know what such things mean.

As gas has been my fuel for the last five years, am pretty well posted in regard to it, and as B. & S. say they can get gas for 15 cents per thousand feet, I would advise them to use it. While the burner suggested by L. C. C. would, in all probability, give them good satisfaction, the one I am using at present is probably most economical, in fact it has proved so in my place, I having heated two houses, each 24x125 feet, the last two years, at an average cost of $150, gas costing 18 cents per thousand, using hot water, open system. The present season I have my system closed, and from what it has shown on the two nights used so far, am satisfied it will be much less the coming season than heretofore. I have one burner of four jets and one of three, seven in all. Now to make this burner, take a piece of 2-inch pipe, the desired length, and cap one end; then tap your holes 1-16-inch, putting them far enough apart to allow a space of say three inches. Put a flat piece of iron one and one-half inches above this pipe, with holes tapped for 2-inch pipe, and cut so that the pipe fits snug and will not drop down nearer the supply pipe than one inch, so as to allow a free circulation of air. Then cut your nipples to 2-inch and, if you wish, you can send part of the flame up to the crown sheet, and by putting elbows on, you can drive it against the side. This flame will be blue to the end, and can be regulated to suit. There is no mixer with this burner, except the mixer caused by the space between your supply pipe and where the flame goes into the pipes to be carried from the ash pit into the boiler. I use, for the support of my pipes, a cast-iron plate, bolted at each end, holding the pipes always in place. Should this not be plain, I will, upon request, make a diagram showing just how it is made. I might add that I was constantly experimenting with gas burners, but when I got this one, could see no place for any improvement, and take pleasure in helping anyone to solve the heating problem. HEATING SYSTEM.

I have a greenhouse 20x80 and a boiler room 20x20, with the floor two feet lower than the floor of the greenhouse. My heating pipes for the coils are only 1-inch. The water line of my boiler will be two feet above the greenhouse floor. I prefer to use hot water, but is it possible with 1-inch pipe and can the coils be placed under the benches? For general greenhouse stock would an overhead heating system with steam be desirable? My house is three feet in the ground with 5-foot walls. I have a twelve horse-power tubular power boiler, and should like to get along without a Morehead trap. With such a boiler with hot water heating how large and how high must the expansion tank be raised? S. C. C.

I do not think it advisable to attempt to heat a house eighty feet long by hot water with 1-inch pipe; 1½-inch pipe is the smallest ever used for hot water and is the size most universally used in steam heating, 1½-inch and 2-inch pipe being extensively employed when hot water is the means of heating.

An overhead system of heating is not desirable in a house for general stock. In such a house all piping should be kept under the benches, if possible, save the main flow or riser, which, if the boiler is not well below the general level of the heating system, is better carried beneath the ridge of the house.

It is not quite clear what is meant by the water line of the boiler. With steam we speak of the water line, but in hot water heating the system must be full and under pressure, the result of an elevated expansion tank.

If the top of the shell of the boiler is not higher than the level of the returns under the benches the pipes can be arranged beneath the benches and the house heated by a hot water system. In such a case I should carry a main flow from the boiler under the ridge of the house to the far end and then divide it by two or three branches to heat the pipes under the benches. The main supply pipe or riser should be 3-inch and if 1½-inch returns are used the house will require fifteen pipes the length of the house. Connect the expansion tank to the main return near the boiler by a ¾-inch pipe and elevate the tank as much as possible, sixteen to twenty feet or more. L. C. C.

DIAMETER OF STACK.

I have two brick flues, one 9x13 and one 13x13, in the same stack, running from two boilers. I am thinking of extending by means of an iron smoke-stack. What diameter of stack would give best results? W. A. C.

An extension eighteen inches in diameter will be sufficient to use in lengthening your chimney. Such a stack will have a trifle less area than the combined area of the two flues, but not enough less to materially lessen the work done by them. L. C. C.

DETROIT.

Florists' Club.

Although not the oldest or the strongest in point of membership, still the Detroit Florists' Club is one of the most active in the country. Organized in August, 1898, with a membership of sixteen, it now has about eighty-five active and fifteen honorary members and is growing stronger with every leaf off the calendar.

Some interesting discussions on various subjects, in which all are invited to participate, young and old alike, take place at the sessions, but aside from the benefits derived from these discussions, the club has done lots of good, having tended to form a closer friendship between those in the trade; in fact, you will have to travel a long way to find a set of men, competitors mostly, who are so willing to help one another as are the Detroit florists.

At the last meeting, held September 19, the boys bade farewell to the old clubroom in the Cowie building, as henceforth the meetings will be held in the basement at 40 Broadway, in a room generously turned over to the club by the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange.

The club's last meeting was fairly well attended. Rudolph Boehringer, of Bay City, was elected a member. The question box was kept working overtime. Among the more important questions was: "What is thought of Nephrolepis Elegantiissima?" The general opinion was that despite the fact that it is an exceedingly fine variety, and one that takes with the better class of people, neither it nor any of the other fancy varieties will tend to drive the Boston out of the market, as they are too delicate.

Grasshoppers are causing lots of worry in this locality, and in answer to a query it was decided that the only practical way to get rid of this pest is to catch them, early in the morning being the best time, as they are not so active before the sun rises.

"Is it not a wise idea to educate the general public as to the names of roses and carnations?" This was deemed advisable by some, but some again thought it would become a nuisance, as people would insist on having some variety not at hand.

"What about Rose Pink Enchantress?" Several of the members who are growing this new variety spoke highly of it. It naturally comes a little pale the early part of the season, but soon assumes a dark shade as the weather gets cooler.

The secretary was in receipt of a letter from A. W. Sinclair, director of the welfare work, saying it pleased the N. C. R. very much to be able to entertain the Detroit Florists' Club.

August von Boeselager, of Mt. Clemens, showed a vase of seedling carnations which were pronounced fine for this season of the year.

President Dilger intends holding a special meeting of the officers of the club in the near future, when a program for the season will be arranged. Any suggestions by members will be thankfully received.

Scores of Florists Use

HAMMOND'S GRAPE DUST

Chrysanthemums and Carnations

This comes from WALLACE GOMERSALL, late superintendent of the famous "Wodenethe," owned and finely maintained by Winthrop Sargent, Esq., Fishkill-on-Hudson, N. Y.:

"For Chrysanthemums we use GRAPE DUST with the best results by freely dusting with it until the delicate blooms come, then we are a bit shy of it, to prevent any staining of the petals, but during the green state, even in bad weather, there is no trace of fungus, and we keep free of the spot. I have recommended it to many gardeners, and so far my acquaintances have found it very valuable. In common with many gardeners and florists, I have found it of great value in checking the rust on carnations. It is not expensive to use, for by using in air bellows it diffuses itself everywhere, and is, in my judgment, a valuable every day article. For roses it is of exceptional benefit against mildew."

How to Use "GRAPE DUST" for VIOLETS,
ROSES, etc., in the Greenhouse.

Fill the house with dust as soon as the plants are set, and let it settle over the plants, or put one pound to a pail of water and spray it finely over everything; plants, ground, benches, etc. Spores are likely to settle anywhere about, and prevention is the best remedy. Its fineness, its reliability, and its great diffusiveness combine to make GRAPE DUST take the highest rank as a popular and economical fungicide, and no mistake about it.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

There has been quite an improvement in business in the last week. The wholesale houses have been cleaning up on almost everything except small roses and asters. A few yellow mums are in evidence, but it is just a little early for them and the few coming in are enough to fill all wants.

Among the retailers, while there are signs of improvement, there is no excitement, and orders are filled without working overtime, but there is the encouragement that things are improving.

Stock of all kinds is improving rapidly. Roses are much better and carnations are getting more plentiful. Early chrysanthemums will commence in about a week. Valley is good, and all green stock is plentiful.

Various Notes.

Randolph & McClements have renewed their lease for one year on the Oakland greenhouse while they get their new property in shape and their new houses up.

Ernest Zieger, manager of the Charles T. Siebert store, has a handsome new delivery wagon. He is one of the most energetic of our Pittsburgh men, which is saying a good deal, but the business he has built up comes from being strictly up-to-date in everything.

Charles Koenig, foreman for the Pittsburgh Rose & Carnation Co., has the sympathy of his host of friends in the loss of his youngest child, a babe 5 months old.

There was a stranger in our city trying to locate a new flower store, but when he learned the rent our retailers are paying for their shops, and which he would have to pay for any kind of location, he said it was "Back to the woods for him," and he has not been heard from since.

Joseph Seaman & Co., of Washington, Pa., who are running the old Forest place, have their houses and stock in fine condition. Their retail store is right up to the standard of our city stores. Mr. Seaman is one of the young men in the trade who has applied energy and business sense to such an advantage that he has built up in this town of about 20,000 population, a business that would be a credit to one of our larger cities.

THE IONIA POT IS THE IDEAL POT

BECAUSE it is STRONG—not the hard, flinty strength of stone—but STRENGTH, COUPLED WITH POROSITY, which makes it distinctively a FLORIST'S POT. Hundreds of the best florists use them exclusively. You will never regret entrusting your next order to us.

Should the old florists of this city, who have passed from this life, be able to look back, they would see every flower store in the city of any importance, either managed or owned by one of their old employees, showing that the Pittsburgh boys stick to their own city. Many men come from the east and west, but soon disappear; the business life is too strenuous for them here.

L. I. Neff has had a great success with lilies this summer. He has brought in crop after crop in succession with a good percentage of bloom, and has not lost a single flower. Those he does not use in his four stores he has had no trouble disposing of at wholesale.

THE TEST OF QUALITY

Cypress is conceded by all authorities to be the best wood for greenhouse construction and quite a little has been said about the "right kind of cypress." Can you tell by looking at a cypress plank just where the sap lies and what kind it is?

One way to be sure that you get the "right kind" of cypress, is to place your order with a firm that makes a test of every piece before shipping and employs an expert to detect cypress defects. Send for "Why Use Cypress" and "The Mummy's Case."

An Old-Timer

came into our office the other day and began throwing stones at our Ad. man (not literally of course)—said he “got off a lot of hot air in his Ads. about boilers and that he didn’t believe there was such a thunder of a lot in this fire travel three times the boiler’s length—didn’t believe it did anyway.” You might think we wouldn’t like that sort of talk but fact is they are just the sort of men and the kind of talk we like, and we want them to come right into our office and out with it—that gives us a chance to prove our case. Well, after a deal of preliminary talk on the various “Burnham” strong points, we apparently hadn’t made any headway until we asked about his smoke pipe—if he could put his hand on it and hold it there, and if he couldn’t hold it there, then wasn’t a good bit of heat going up the chimney that he paid for going into the greenhouse? Then we gave him strong proof that you could put your hand on a “Burnham” smoke pipe and that the heat did go into the greenhouse—our talk hit him on the pocket book side and we sold not one “Burnham,” but two.

It's the fire travel that does it—three times the boiler length is something more than a selling point, it's a point of economy.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Pans of Poinsettias.

Now is the time to make up pans of poinsettias. Pan is hardly the right term. The seed-pan is too shallow. The azalea pot, or the half pot as it is better known, is the correct thing. These half pots should be made up from small plants in 2½-inch pots. It is not safe to make them up from plants taken from the cutting-bed, as some may start to grow strongly and others only feebly. Select plants which have become well rooted in the little pots, plants of about equal height and vigor, short-jointed and of firm growth. You may then expect the plants, when the bracts are fully developed, to be about equal in height and development.

An 8-inch pan will meet with the readiest sale and next a 9-inch and 10-inch. A few larger than this size can be filled, but there will be much less demand for them. An 8-inch pan will take six plants, a 9-inch seven plants and a 10-inch nine plants. If you want any 6-inch or 7-inch pans wait three weeks before filling them, because if filled too early the soil will become exhausted before time to sell, and exhaustion of soil means loss of foliage.

In filling the pans of 8-inch size or over, plant three small Boston ferns around the edge. If you have none in pots, then strong runners will do. The green fronds of the ferns will greatly improve the appearance of the pans and contrast with the bright scarlet bracts.

Although the poinsettia is a tropical plant and should not be below 60 degrees at any time, the loss of foliage is not so often caused by a low temperature as by impoverishment of the soil; so the soil for these pans should be rich. A rather coarse, heavy manure and a 5-inch pot of bone meal to a bushel of the compost will do quite well. Sift neither soil nor manure. "The sieve is the curse of the potting bench."

Poinsettias in Pots and Benches.

We still grow a good many poinsettias singly in 6-inch pots, as they answer the purpose for cutting or decorations in pots. If now in 4-inch pots, they should be shifted at once into 6-inch, for the roots must not be disturbed when the plants are in leaf. We learned this years ago, and one year to our great loss, by shifting them near the end of November, when their big, green leaves tumbled off as if a frost had struck them. If you have more in pots than you can conveniently handle, then spread five inches of soil on any bench where the temperature is not going below 55 degrees and plant out ten inches apart. You will get immense bracts, which are easily managed and useful for cutting.

Harristii Lilies.

Your earliest Bermuda lilies should now be removed from the coldframe to a warm house. The stems are up five or six inches and you may be sure they are well rooted. No actual forcing is necessary, yet those you expect in flower by Thanksgiving should be given not less than 60 degrees at night. After several years' close observation I am convinced that the disappointment which occurs in not having these lilies in flower in November and abundantly in December is usually from keeping them too cool in October and November. Charles Roney, manager of the Lakeview Rose Gardens, Jamestown, N. Y., where these lilies are grown by the tens of thousands for Thanksgiving and Christmas, told me he is not afraid to give them 90 degrees at night when they have to be hurried.

Your Christmas lilies should be in a house where, as soon as chilly weather comes, you can keep a night temperature livered here and to whom the payment for the bulbs was so distant that it did not look formidable. Get the cases unpacked and the bags open and placed in a dry, cool place.

It is quite desirable to be able to cut really good, long-stemmed tulips and narcissi by the middle of January and to do this you should get a few hundred of each early variety into flats at once. The best early varieties make a short list. Here they are: Vermilion Brilliant; a fine scarlet; Yellow Prince, or Chrysolora, both yellow; La Reine, white and often coming pink; Cottage Maid, fine pink. There is still an earlier tulip, the Duc Van Thol, which can be flowered at Christmas, but it is a short-stemmed, poor little thing and we easily can dispense with it.

Also box up a good lot of Von Sion for January forcing, and above all get into flats at once a lot of Narcissus Golden Spur. This has proven to be the finest of all the trumpet narcissi. It can be had in perfection by the middle of January and outsells any bulbous flower.

Of late years we find tulips and narcissi sell best from the middle of Feb-

of 65 degrees to 70 degrees and a rise of 10 degrees to 15 degrees in the daytime. Below this temperature they will only stand still and you will blame the seedsman who sold you the bulbs.

Dutch Bulbs.

The so-called Dutch bulbs are here and we have contributed our donation to Uncle Sam's treasury for allowing the bulbs to enter the ports of this more or less free country. Perhaps after all this import duty is a good thing for the trade, for in its absence we should be flooded with bulbs ordered by people because it cost so little to get them de-ruary on to Easter, and for these there is no hurry, for another four weeks, but those you want for January should be in the flats without delay and starting to root, for without roots they will not force.

Boxing Dutch Bulbs.

I have many times given you my idea of what I consider the ideal box or flat. Perhaps a different size may suit your benches. Don't, however, for supposed economy's sake, use boxes of different size, old soap boxes sawed in two, etc. We find a flat three inches deep, twenty-four inches long and twelve inches wide a convenient size, which we make out of new lumber, 1/2-inch for the bottom and sides and 1-inch for the end pieces. These flats are useful for delivering bedding plants in the spring.

I once believed that any old soil was good enough for forcing tulips and narcissi. No special preparation is needed, but I want it no poorer than the old soil of a carnation or rose bed you threw out at midsummer. Fill the flat full of soil but not firmly. Press the bulb into the loose soil until its tip is about even with the top edge of the flat; scatter a few handfuls of soil among the bulbs, and that's all there is to the operation. If a man is supplied with the flats filled with soil and they are carted away after the bulbs are squeezed in, he can plant a good many thousand in a day. When your soil and flats are in readiness, the planting is a light job and an easy one, but not if left until the cold, wet days of November.

Place the flats outdoors within reach of the hose and cover with three or four fore, in the absence of heavy rain you must take the hose and soak the bed sufficiently to go through, not only the three inches of covering, but down through the soil in the flats. A neglect of this has been the cause of many failures with early tulips and narcissi.

Tulip Beds.

If a customer asks you to plant a bed of tulips or hyacinths give them this answer, which is gardening gospel: "Yes, madam, much obliged. I will not neglect it and will save our best bulbs for your garden, but I will not plant them until the last of October or early November, because the later the bulbs are planted in the fall the finer and more lasting are the flowers in the spring." "All right, Mr. Potts, you know best."

GEORGE E. McCLURE.

A Gardener Born, Not Made.

Most of our young gardeners and florists—and, for that matter, the old ones, from infancy a phenomenon in gardening will be the result.

Such a one we have in George E. McClure, son of the well-known George W. McClure. Youthful George showed a love of plants and their care before he was 10 years of age, and before he was 12 years old he could tell you the names of a hundred leading varieties of chrysanthemums by the leaf alone. But mums did not occupy all his boyhood fancy for flowers. He liked to study orchids, and the more rare plants found in private collections. For several years he had charge of the modest collection of orchids in possession of the writer. Then he took charge of the rather extensive collection at the private garden of G. H. Lewis, of Buffalo. Some five or six years ago he was invited by Prof. Wm. Trelease, of the Missouri Botanic Gardens, to work under that estimable gentleman, where he has had principal charge of the extensive and comprehensive collection of orchids, which not only includes all the familiar commercial species, but hundreds of species and varieties little known outside of a botanical collection. This young man lately has returned to his home, dutifully to help his father in his extensive landscape business, and had the good sense to bring a St. Louis bride with him.

The writer requested George E. McClure, a few days ago, to write some seasonable hints on commercial orchids. He has kindly handed to me more than I expected, and I think it is so well prepared that I would ask you, Mr. Editor, to print it in full, as I know we can all get some valuable points from it.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

PROPAGATING.

How late in spring can I pinch geraniums not to interfere with blooming for May 30?

How late in spring can I take cuttings from geraniums to be in bloom for May 30?

What time shall I plant lobelia seeds to have blooming plants for May 1?

What time shall I plant phlox seeds to have blooming plants for May 1?

J. C.

The middle of February is as late as zonal geraniums should be pinched.

The same time is late enough to take cuttings from old or young plants, and expect the cuttings to make good bedding plants by the middle of May.

Lobelia seed should be sown at the end of January. Seedlings do not make good plants for vases or veranda-boxes. Old plants lifted in the fall and cut back are the thing for this purpose.

Phlox Drummondii should be sown at the middle or end of March. Sow in flats and transplant to other flats two inches apart.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

Some fine lots of named pyrethrums are just now seen on the English markets which are useful for decorative purposes. The blooms are selling at high figures and meeting a very quick sale. These cuts, of course, are the second crop of bloom, the usual time for the full crop being during May and June, after which if the plants are treated right they will continue to bloom right up to frost. When the first blooms are cleared off in May or June, the plants should be well hoed and cleared of weeds, dead leaves and all flower inches of soil or tanbark, refuse hops, or sawdust, whichever is the handiest to procure. We always use a light soil dug from the side of the beds where the flats are placed. I may as well caution you here that the bottom of the flat prevents any moisture reaching the bulbs and the soil in the flats dries out. Unless you get a heavy rain at least once a week the soil in the flats will be dry and few roots will be made. There-too,—have drifted into the profession, not so much from their own choice as from accident. In many cases because it was the calling of the father, who perhaps asked for help in the houses or garden. Soon it was the only earning power the son possessed, and so he drifted on. Where there is no real fondness for the cultivation of plants and flowers, the progress will be slow. Where a boy evinces a love of plants almost stalks, after which a dressing of some fertilizer should be given in the way of quick acting bone or similar manure; also a dressing of lime, which not only keeps away slugs and insects, but is beneficial to the plants, pyrethrums being exceptionally partial to lime. A light mulch of horse or other manure may be given, but care must be taken that this does not touch the crown of the plant, otherwise mildew of the stool will be the immediate result. Treated in this way a full crop of magnificent bloom may be cut throughout the summer and autumn, and it should be borne in mind that every flower a pyrethrum plant makes means an increase in growth, as every flower of one year is the result of a distinct new eye and root, and thus by encouraging bloom a grower is also increasing the size of his stock plants for future division.

A. Dickson & Sons are scoring a noteworthy success with their hybrid tea rose, Lady Ashtown. It is described as a probable rival and worthy successor of the well known Killarney. It is a vigorous grower and free-flowering and for cutting the exceptionally long stems are just the thing. The color is light rose and the buds are an exquisite shape. Its habit and general characteristics are said to make it the finest bedder we have.

is a question entirely dependent on suitability of soil, water and treatment. Where soil and water are suitable and the stock is skilfully treated, Brides and Maids can be made to produce a cut per plant of from twenty-seven to thirty-five blooms of all grades, but many of us are content to take a less cut than this so that we may have a higher grade bloom with a good stem.

In order to get the best average cut the plants should be of the best grade and should be benched during the latter part of May or early in June, so that they may have the full benefit of the growing season.

The most essential elements required in rose culture under glass are suitability of soil, which must be properly composted; a good supply of water, with a pressure of at least forty pounds per square inch; houses heated so that a temperature of 65 degrees can be maintained during a protracted period of zero weather, not that this temperature is necessary to the well-being of the plants, but as a matter of safety should the temperature drop lower.

The ventilators should be large enough and so placed as to give the fullest and freest access of air without causing a draught, as there is nothing so detrimental to the health of a rose plant as to be situated in a draught.

Possessed of these necessities, by a careful perusal from week to week of the rose notes as they appear in these columns, sufficient information can be obtained to enable you to produce a good cut of stock the first season. The practice thus obtained and a careful observance of conditions as they arise, which should be noted for future use, and using the facts thus gathered in your future operations, you will every year improve on your previous efforts, and any points upon which you are not certain as to the method of procedure will be carefully considered by this office upon receipt of explicit question.

RIBES.

A BEGINNING.

We want to ask about growing roses. Brides and Maids are the ones to start with. We never have grown any before, but have grown good violets, mums, carnations and mignonette. We have a new house running north and south, Clipper sashbar, glass 18x24, three benches fifty inches wide, with four walks to the house 20x100. It is very light. We have it planted with carnations, but think another year will plant it with roses if you think we can grow them well in a house like this. The house has ventilators on each side of the ridge but none at the side. How many rose plants will a house like that hold, three benches fifty inches wide and ninety-six feet long? What would be a good cut per plant? When ought they to be planted? It is rather early to talk about next spring, but it is on our mind and we would like to know what you think about it.

R. & S.

Houses running north and south do not find much favor among rose growers, a southern aspect having the preference. While preferring the latter aspect for many reasons, and especially where Beauties are the crop, still good tea and hybrid tea roses can be produced in houses running north and south.

On several places where I have had charge we have had houses of both exposures and where the crops were teas, and the soil, water and treatment were identical and all other conditions equal there was little difference in the quantity and quality of the cut; in fact, where any difference did exist in point of quality it was in favor of the house running north and south.

In these houses the cut during January and February usually was a little short in quantity, but the average cut for the season was about the same as from the houses with the southern aspect.

In houses such as you describe, with 18x24 glass and four walks to the house, there is sufficient light and ample air space to warrant the production of excellent stock.

With the above bench arrangement the house would contain, at twelve inches apart, 1,600 plants, at which distance, if kept well trained, there is room to produce the best results.

As to the probable cut per plant, that

SEASONABLE COMMENT.

Rust.

Several inquiries have reached me during the last week about a cure for rust and as they were from widely separated points it is evident this disease is still with us to some extent. In the east rust does not seem to perpetuate itself from year to year, so that infected plants will produce clean cuttings, which will not show the disease the next year. But I am by no means sure that this obtains all over the country. I am strongly inclined to think that in the southern and extreme western states, where the plants are grown outside and there is no winter to speak of, that rust will reappear every year in greater or lesser degree, according to the weather. If we get wet, muggy weather in July or August, rust will appear and will spread with alarming rapidity on plants outside, while the indoor plants, which are not exposed to the same atmospheric conditions, will keep perfectly clean. This plainly shows that the rust, if not actually caused by the moisture and heat, finds in such conditions the ideal spot for its rapid development.

In my experience sulphide of potassium (liver of sulphur) dissolved in the proportion of one ounce to two gallons of water and applied directly to the under side of the leaf will hold rust in check and if faithfully followed up will finally completely clean it out. The scare of a few years ago regarding rust seems to have died out, but the fact remains that a grower with a batch of rusty plants on his hands has troubles of his own.

Ventilation.

The cool nights are reminding us that we are no longer in the good, old summer time and the ventilators need to be lowered every night. I do not like the house to fall below 45 degrees and when there is frost in the air it is far better to run a line of heat through the house and have on several inches of air than to close the house up tightly to keep up the desired temperature. A close atmosphere is always a damp one, and the loss from damping flowers will more than pay for a little heat applied when it is needed. CHARLES H. TOTTY.

A LEAF-MINER.

Enclosed are samples of our chrysanthemum leaves, which are eaten. We tried several remedies which we heard of, but they did not do any good. If you know of a remedy please let us

This occurred on a night when the weather was threatening. The plants are outdoors, to be roofed over as the season advances. This was done by a discharged employee with the purpose of injuring the stock. He had only covered about half the bed before being detected. The plants in that half are burned down with all the top buds and shoots. Since then they have begun to break afresh from the base of the plants. Will I get any flowers worth having? J. C. S.

The result would be just about what J. C. S. says did happen; i. e., the plants would be burned and whatever growth was on the plants would be rendered useless. Paris green is useful in chrysanthemum growing if used sparingly, but a heavy sprinkling would be certain to have disastrous results. The alum would be equally certain to in-judge as to whether the plants are breaking strongly or no, but it would seem to me that any shoots that appear must of necessity be weak, and if I had anything else that needed the room I would throw out the plants affected.

AN ILLINOIS ESTABLISHMENT.

Reproduced on this page are two recent photographs which give an idea of the establishment of I. L. Pillsbury, of Galesburg, Ill. Mr. Pillsbury is well known as one of the most successful of the many prosperous florists in the provincial cities of Illinois, and the pictures will serve to interest many who are similarly situated. One view shows a house principally devoted to roses in pots but also containing many other items of the miscellaneous stock which must be carried by one who does business of a general character.

The other illustration is from a photograph showing the establishment from the side, the ends of the greenhouse being obscured by the service buildings. In the foreground is the bedding, which has served to attract much attention during the summer. The words, "Pillsbury, Florist," appear in large letters, back of which are beds of geraniums, cannas, etc., and between these and the buildings is a patch of carnation plants now housed in first-class shape. In addition to this establishment Mr. Pillsbury has a downtown office at 223 East Main street.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.Committee on Seedlings.

President Duckham has announced the committees to examine seedlings and sports on the dates as follows: October 6, 13, 20 and 27; November 3, 10, 17 and 24, 1906.

Exhibits to receive attention from the committees must in all cases be prepaid to destination, and the entry fee of $2 should be forwarded to the secretary not later than Tuesday of the week preceding examination, or may accompany the blooms. Special attention is called to the rule requiring that sports to receive a certificate must pass three committees.

know. Almost all are affected, but the Dekalb the most. G. A. F.

The leaves are being eaten by an insect very much like the celery leaf-miner (Tephritis), possibly the same thing, or certainly the same species. They are about the hardest of any larvæ to destroy, as they work inside the leaf and are protected by the two outside skins, so that Paris green is of no use. I would recommend a strong solution of one of the liquid extracts of tobacco. This will kill some but not nearly all. Take off any leaves that are not really necessary and burn them.

If G. A. F. looks closely he will see a tiny worm in each leaf at the point up to which the leaf is skeletonized, a pressure of the thumb and finger will kill the worm and no more trouble will ensue on that particular leaf. It is slow work, but the only sure way, which is why I say, remove any leaves that are not necessary to the appearance of the plant. The worm eats all the substance out of the leaf, leaving only the veins and a silvery skin, the latter being left apparently to protect it as long as protection is necessary. C. H. T.

Special Premiums.

The Chrysanthemum Society of America offers the following special prize list for the exhibition at Chicago, November 6 to 11:

C. S. A. prize, silver cup for best ten flowers, one variety.

Prizes of $50, $25 and $10 for twelve blooms on 24-inch stems, for the best seedling or sport not yet in commerce. The color to be white, pink or yellow, the name to be given by the donor of the prize.

W. Wells, of Merstham, Surrey, England, offers gold, silver gilt and silver medals for six varieties of chrysanthemums two of each on 12-inch stems. The following varieties are eligible in this competition: Mrs. H. Partridge, Mrs.

D. Willis James, Merstham Crimson, Mary Ann Pickett, Beatrice May, T. Richardson, Mrs. Heaume, E. J. Brooks, Mrs. F. F. Thompson, Mrs. Wm. Knox, Mrs. J. E. Dunn and Miss May Seddon.

Charles H. Totty offers prizes of $12, $8 and $5 for twelve blooms in twelve varieties, stems not over twelve inches long, introductions of 1906, open to all.

F. R. Pierson offers a silver cup for thirty-six chrysanthemums, six varieties, six blooms of each, introduced in America in 1905 and 1906.

Nathan Smith & Son offer $25 for best twenty-four blooms of American origin, introductions of 1904, 1905 and 1906, three varieties, white, pink and yellow, eight blooms of each, shown in separate vases.

Vaughan's Seed Store offers a silver cup, value $15, for the best specimen bush chrysanthemum plant, which has not received any other award. Open to private gardeners only.

The E. G. Hill Co. offers a special prize of $15 for the best twenty-five blooms of Chrysanthemum Mary Maun, and $10 for the best fifteen blooms of any introduction of 1906.

CYANIDE FUMIGATION.

A Successful Experiment.

Wishing to test the theory I advanced a few weeks ago regarding the use of pure cyanide instead of the commercial article of uncertain strength for greenhouse fumigation, we selected a house 20x36, even-span, ten feet to ridge, with side walls four feet high. We figured this to contain somewhat more than 5,000 cubic feet, but we called it an even 5,000.

This house contained a large variety of plants, as the following list will show: Geraniums, coleus, cyclamen, primula, both obconica and Chinese; heliotrope, farfugium, fuchsia, hydrangea, abutilon, ferns, smilax, Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri, callas, German ivy, petunia, ficus, chrysanthemums, grevillea, palms, dracaena, lobelia, impatiens, rose geraniums, tradescantia, salvia, Baby Rambler and a few potted carnations; in fact, a representative collection of the plants usually found in the majority of establishments. This house was badly infested with white fly, and black aphid was giving us considerable trouble on the chrysanthemums.

As we were working with a tremendously powerful agent, we were a considerable time coming to a decision as to the amount to start with, having no data of any value to guide us. We finally decided, however, to try four ounces to 5,000 cubic feet, but not expecting very much in the way of results. Contrast this with twelve and a half ounces, as recommended by W. S. and others and you can see that we were decidedly conservative.

We took four one-pint fruit jars, filled them half full of a cold mixture of one and a half ounces strong sulphuric acid and six ounces of water, and set them in the walks, two on each side, about ten feet from the ends. Then with a rather delicate pair of scales we weighed out accurately four one-ounce portions of chemically pure ninety-nine per cent potassium cyanide. Each of these was rolled in a small piece of tissue paper (don't use the waxed paper) and the ends twisted tightly. These were then ready to drop in the acid without danger of spilling any. When we were ready we started at the further end and dropped a roll in each jar as we came to it. We closed the house up tightly and left it so all night.

Upon inspection the next morning we were simply astonished at the result. We could not scare up a live white fly anywhere, but dead ones were everywhere. The black aphid were completely cleaned out. The mealy-bug apparently was the Ventilation.

The cool nights are reminding us that we are no longer in the good, old summer time and the ventilators need to be lowered every night. I do not like the house to fall below 45 degrees and when there is frost in the air it is far better to run a line of heat through the house and have on several inches of air than to close the house up tightly to keep up the desired temperature. A close atmosphere is always a damp one, and the loss from damping flowers will more than pay for a little heat applied when it is needed. CHARLES H. TOTTY.

A LEAF-MINER.

Enclosed are samples of our chrysanthemum leaves, which are eaten. We tried several remedies which we heard of, but they did not do any good. If you know of a remedy please let us

This occurred on a night when the weather was threatening. The plants are outdoors, to be roofed over as the season advances. This was done by a discharged employee with the purpose of injuring the stock. He had only covered about half the bed before being detected. The plants in that half are burned down with all the top buds and shoots. Since then they have begun to break afresh from the base of the plants. Will I get any flowers worth having?

J. C. S.

The result would be just about what J. C. S. says did happen; i. e., the plants would be burned and whatever growth was on the plants would be rendered useless. Paris green is useful in chrysanthemum growing if used sparingly, but a heavy sprinkling would be certain to have disastrous results. The alum would be equally certain to in-judge as to whether the plants are breaking strongly or no, but it would seem to me that any shoots that appear must of necessity be weak, and if I had anything else that needed the room I would throw out the plants affected.

AN ILLINOIS ESTABLISHMENT.

Reproduced on this page are two recent photographs which give an idea of the establishment of I. L. Pillsbury, of Galesburg, Ill. Mr. Pillsbury is well known as one of the most successful of the many prosperous florists in the provincial cities of Illinois, and the pictures will serve to interest many who are similarly situated. One view shows a house principally devoted to roses in pots but also containing many other items of the miscellaneous stock which must be carried by one who does business of a general character.

The other illustration is from a photograph showing the establishment from the side, the ends of the greenhouse being obscured by the service buildings. In the foreground is the bedding, which has served to attract much attention during the summer. The words, "Pillsbury, Florist," appear in large letters, back of which are beds of geraniums, cannas, etc., and between these and the buildings is a patch of carnation plants now housed in first-class shape. In addition to this establishment Mr. Pillsbury has a downtown office at 223 East Main street.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.Committee on Seedlings.

President Duckham has announced the committees to examine seedlings and sports on the dates as follows: October 6, 13, 20 and 27; November 3, 10, 17 and 24, 1906.

Exhibits to receive attention from the committees must in all cases be prepaid to destination, and the entry fee of $2 should be forwarded to the secretary not later than Tuesday of the week preceding examination, or may accompany the blooms. Special attention is called to the rule requiring that sports to receive a certificate must pass three committees.

A Successful Experiment.

only thing in the insect line that survived.

As to plant injury, after the lapse of a week the only thing that shows any signs of being affected in the least are two fine-leaved rose geraniums. The growing tips, with two or three tender leaves, are dead, while the ordinary broad-leaved variety shows no sign of injury.

I now feel more certain than ever that my theory that the bad results experienced by many are due to using cyanide of uncertain strength is correct.

Having had such flattering success with it this time we are going to use it in place of tobacco for green-fly. I hope others who have white fly to contend with will try this according to the directions given above and report results.

A. E. SUMMEY.

CESPEDESIA DISCOLOR.

Cespedesias are seldom encountered in America, although it is a South American genus, probably for the reason that the plants have little value commer-bearing showy yellow flowers in large panicles. The chief decorative feature of C. discolor, however, lies in the ornamental coloration of its young growth, which is rapidly developed from terminal buds, the five or six long drooping lanceolate leaves composing it being of a pale cinnamon buff, or biscuit color, faintly suffused with rose and veined with pale yellow, forming a striking contrast to the dark green of the mature leaves.

THE RANUNCULUS.

The cultivation of the ranunculus has largely died out, and we seldom, if ever, hear of any one trying to raise varieties from seed; yet there is great probability of new colors, shades and forms arising from so doing. The plant is hardy, flowers early in the spring, and the mode of cultivation presents no difficulty. Very pretty double-flowered varieties are grown largely by the French and Dutch, but the variety R. Asiaticus superbissimus, is, perhaps, more effective as a affords the amateur a greater degree of pleasure when he is enabled to raise plants from seed rather than from claws, sets, tubers, etc., the hopes and prospects of so doing being greater, and, if at the same time there is no loss of time, and no great difficulty about it. If the seeds are sown in the months of August and September, on porous, fairly light soil, in a well-sheltered spot, and the treatment is the same as that afforded other autumn-sown seeds, it is possible to have seedlings in flower in the following month of April. Such, at the least, is the case at Naples. In more northerly countries some sort of winter protection should be afforded, which, in my opinion, would be properly met by an ordinary garden frame, with a straw mat thrown over the glass in severe weather. If the position of the bed is on the south side of a wall or building, so much the better are the chances of early blooming. The usually semi-double flowers of the variety far exceed in beauty, and variety of their coloring, the double French and Dutch ranunculuses; and besides the distinct colors—red, white, yellow and violet, with the sub-tints, creamy-white, flesh pink, scarlet, orange, purple, etc.—there is scarcely a hue which is not represented in these flowers.

"The abundant flowering of this variety raises its value considerably as a decorative object."

A LATH HOUSE.

Ten tons of cycas stems sounds like quite a few, but more than one year this has been the weight of the stems bought and started by the George Wittbold Co., Chicago. There are those who say that the sago palm is no longer as salable as in years gone by, but this is not the experience of the Wittbold Co. When the new plant at Edgebrook was erected, provision was made for a lath house in which to shelter such subjects as the cycas. The house is shown in the accompanying illustration. Beyond the cycas stands Otto Wittbold, the superintendent of the place. In the farther distance is a section of asparagus and beyond that are rubber plants. All three items are grown in enormous quantities by the Wittbolds, but they are not able to produce enough stock to meet their demand and are constantly buying to maintain their stock.

THE CYCLAMEN.

Another installment on the subject of an inexpensive method of growing cyclamen, begun in the REVIEW of August 16, and continued September 27:

Lifting and Potting.

We now come to the critical stage in the proceedings. Everything depends on the work being done with thoroughness and dispatch. All material and arrangements for the reception of the plants must be in readiness at the start, so that there may be no unnecessary exposure of the plants.

The bench, preferably a side one, on which the potted plants are to stand, should be thoroughly cleaned and white-washed, and should have placed on the bottom an inch of clean cinders. With wire staples and a few lath or similar material arrange a support to hold a covering of cheese-cloth about eighteen inches above the bench, and a strip to fall about the sides.

Prepare the soil as recommended for use in the frame, with the addition of a cially except to such firms as make a business of supplying plants for large private collections. The genus is one of few species. The name is derived from that of Juan Cespedes, a priest of Santa Fe de Bogota and the date of introduction to Europe is given as late as 1878. Cespedesia discolor was recently shown before the Royal Horticultural Society in England and was awarded a first-class certificate. It is a strikingly ornamental stove plant, border flower, and eminently so as a cut flower for room and table decoration.

M. Herb, seedsman, at Naples, gives in the Deutsche Garten Zeitung, for April 28, a short appreciative and instructive account of the plant and his method of obtaining flowers in seven months from the time of sowing the seed:

"I should like to recommend the method of raising Ranunculus Asiaticus superbissimus from seed, as it always

The Lath House of the George Wittbold Co., at Edgebrook, Ill.

3½-inch pot of bone meal to a bushel of mixture, not forgetting the lime and sand.

Pots need not be new, but it is imperative that they be clean; in fact, cleanliness in all operations connected with cyclamen culture might be said to be as essential as with orchids.

Provide crocks or potsherds large enough to nearly touch the sides of the pot when laid in the bottom, with the concave sides down. You will need also a quantity of charcoal broken to the size of pea coal, enough of this being placed in each pot just to cover the crock.

September 1 to 15 will probably see some of the most forward plants ready to lift, but as there will be practically no increase in size after lifting, do not make the mistake of allowing too large a pot, or figure on giving a shift. Any plant looks far better in a pot one size too small than in one too large; but of all plants, not only for appearance's sake but for its welfare, the cyclamen must not be overpotted.

These first lifted specimens will in all probability be the ones to bloom and sell at Christmas or earlier, and it will be apparent from the proportion of plants of desirable size ready to lift between the above dates, that there are good reasons for commencing seed sowing operations from August 15 to September 1.

Lift carefully and but a few at a time, removing all earthworms readily caught hold of; also retain as many roots as possible. Pot at once, observing that the crock and charcoal are in position in every case.

The soil should be well firmed, and at the finish should be about three-quarters of an inch below the rim of the pot, and the corm half covered. Water immediately, immersing the pot to fill level full, and stand in the bench provided. The ball as lifted will in most cases need reducing or shaping to conform to the pot, but never squeeze into shape.

Care After Potting.

Attention for the next month will consist mainly of spraying lightly several times daily, according to the weather, wetting the leaves without adding moisture to the soil, the removal of dead foliage, and frequent standing over and spreading out to allow full development.

By this time root action will be restored, but not to such an extent as to warrant removing the cloth shade, though some extra vigorous plants might go along on a bench not exposed to direct sunlight or draughts. Water such as need it, but sparingly.

When by knocking out of the pot, it is seen that roots have grown through the ball, it is time enough to think of removing the shade, and this should be done by degrees.

As fast as any unlifted plants attain desirable size, they should be treated in like manner, observing that all should be potted and housed by November 1.

Watering.

The cyclamen always has had the reputation of quickly resenting either an excess or a deficiency of moisture at the root, and it may be well to state here that there is no prospect of this reputation becoming lost or changed; once let the soil get water-logged or a plant severely wilted, and all is over. The wilt resulting from the transfer out of the frame to the pot is no cause for alarm, being due to the roots' inability to take up moisture for the time being.

I well remember one plant in particular, a fine specimen when lifted, which in spite of extra care persisted in wilting during the day for several weeks, but at Christmas it was a dream of bloom and foliage; the latter through alternate wilting and reviving had at the time of re-establishment completely hidden the pot.

At the first opportunity, that is, after growth has been resumed and at a time when a watering is needed, the soil should receive a generous application of lime water to destroy any earthworms present, it being next to impossible to remove them all at lifting time without serious disturbance of the roots.

It will be observed that comparatively little animal manure is used in any of the soil mixtures, for the reason that plants firm in tissue are produced when grown in soil composed mainly of vegetable matter (rotted soil), becoming thereby better fitted to undergo the operation of lifting and potting; as the buds increase in number, alternate weekly applications of sheep manure and Scotch soot in liquid form of moderate strength will be beneficial to flower and foliage.

Results to be Expected.

Of the number planted in the frames, there is no reason why seventy-five per cent will not make specimen plants, the smallest requiring a 7-inch pot, with some of the extra large ones filling an 8-inch to its limit. This is large enough for the commercial grower to sell to advantage. Under this method the writer has repeatedly produced plants measuring eighteen inches through foliage, and carrying from fifty to seventy-five flowers at one time.

The question of prices is a matter which must be left to each grower. Personal knowledge of the character of his trade must serve as a guide. I can say, however, that $5 will not stand in the way of the sale of an extra fine specimen in any retail market.

Other Use for Frames.

The frame may be thought by some to represent quite an outlay just to grow cyclamen, and so it would be if there were not a number of uses to which it can be put while not occupied by these. For instance, it may be used for a crop of early pansies, or to hold lilacs and other shrubs to be brought in as needed to force; no need to worry about what to put in.

I have perhaps been more explicit in explaining this method than would seem necessary to experienced growers, but I am mindful of the fact that beginners are constantly joining the ranks.

Now a word in conclusion to gardeners of the old school: This plan is not wholly new to us all, but if so to you, do not pronounce it impracticable without a fair trial. Not that I care a straw about criticism or ridicule, as quantities of that came my way during the spring and summer of the year my efforts were crowned with success.

PHILADELPHIA FLORISTS' CLUB.

The Florists' Club of Philadelphia elected officers for the ensuing year at the October meeting, held in Horticultural hall last Tuesday evening. The new president, Samuel S. Pennock, needs no introduction to REVIEW readers, as his hosts of friends all over the country will gladly testify. His present position, the highest gift the club can bestow, will give his exceptional organizing abilities abundant scope in preparing for the S. A. F. convention of 1907, which will be a record-breaker.

Fred Hahman, the vice-president, is one of the most popular men in the club, an able grower, cheerful, kindly and always willing to put the club's welfare ahead of his own personal interests. Do you wonder he has hosts of friends?

Edwin Lonsdale, secretary, is the superintendent of horticulture at Girard College, a hard worker for the club's interests, whose geniality and tact keep the membership roll steadily increasing.

J. William Colflesh, the treasurer, is a clever grower, quiet and retiring, but of sterling merit, a man worthy to fill the place of the beloved Thomas Cartledge. The club owes him a debt of gratitude.

EMBELLISHMENT OF WAYSIDES.

[A paper by J. A. Pettigrew, read before the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston, April 17, 1906, continued from The Review of September 27.]

New England Trees.

That the early settlers of New England transmitted their love of trees to subsequent generations, the magnificent elms to be found in our New England towns give evidence. The New England elms are noted far and wide; the charm they add to the wayside is beyond price. Is it not important then that every effort should be made to encourage the growth of, and to protect, all wayside trees?

Washington's trees, as an attraction to the city, divide honors with its best architectural features; not because of the individual beauty of the trees as fine specimens, but because of their value as a whole in the adornment of the city. This results from an intelligent control of the planting and care of the trees, the work having been placed in the hands of competent commissioners, among whom have been numbered John Saul, William Saunders, and William R. Smith, the only survivor. The results accomplished in Washington are just as attainable in any other community. All that is necessary is wise legislation and the education of the people to the importance of the subject.

At the present time, great interest is being manifested throughout the country in the preservation of objects of natural beauty; in the regulation of the bill-board nuisance, which everywhere disfigures the landscape; and in the general improvement of towns and cities along esthetic lines. This betokens a general public awakening to the importance of civic beauty.

Societies having these objects in view are being organized in every direction. We are glad to note that a large share of the attention of these societies is devoted to the planting and preservation of trees. These influences properly directed cannot but have a good effect in the furthering of the work of making the city, and the country also, beautiful.

Laws have been enacted in Massachusetts making it obligatory on the part of towns to elect tree wardens, who shall have the care and control of all public trees, except those already in charge of park commissioners; while elsewhere throughout the country laws and ordinances have been framed, looking to the care and planting of trees in the public streets and highways. The Massachusetts statute is mandatory in regard to the appointment of a warden and the scope of his power. The provision for furnishing funds for planting and care is permissive, which will largely induce negative results. The idea, however, is sound, and when certain of its defects have been remedied, and the knowledge of tree culture increased, its influence on civic beauty will be very powerful.

Public Co-operation Necessary.

But the simple passage of a tree-warden law alone does not insure that there will be protection; that trees suitable in kind will be planted; or that their requirements shall be furnished to them. Let it be a popular service to see that competent wardens are elected, and that their duties are faithfully performed. Laws and ordinances are of little avail unless supported, in their execution, by the hearty co-operation of the public. The requirements of the trees are simple; good soil, and protection from the vandal hand, is all that is necessary for favorable results. But money must be provided to pay for these, as well as to meet the expense of pruning and fertilizing; also to combat the ravages of insects which infest trees in towns and cities—a consequence of the disturbance of nature's balance, resulting from the banishment or the destruction of insect-eating birds.

Tree-planting and improvement associations have done much to advance the cause of tree-planting in public streets. The Brooklyn Tree-Planting Association recommends the co-operative plan. Under this plan competent foresters may be consulted or engaged, trees may be bought, and the ground prepared for planting more cheaply than can be done by individual effort. Associations of this character, however, are difficult to organize. Not everyone possesses enthusiasm enough to enter into the work of planting young trees; the result seems too distant, and planting for posterity appears, to many persons, too great a self-sacrifice.

In the absence of competent civic control of tree-planting, the co-operative plan, or any other plan looking to the planting of trees in the streets, should be adopted by every citizen who has the interests of his city at heart. No excuse can be offered for the absence of trees on every suitable street, and on every roadside. The matter is easily within the power of each municipality to correct.

What to plant for street trees, and how to plant them, are important questions, on the answers to which depend much of the success in planting for street embellishment.

GRAND FORKS, N. D.—E. S. Kneeland, of Hillsboro, is here superintending the building of a large greenhouse which he hopes to have ready for occupancy early in October. The establishment is located on University avenue, near the convent.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

F. Dorner & Sons Co., Lafayette, Ind., register Carnation Red Chief, an even, clear shade of scarlet, very early and exceptionally free; Bonnie Maid, edged white and shaded to a pink center; Wionona, a clear medium pink.

ALBERT M. HERR, Sec'y.

MARION, IND.—Gib Jay wants the city to set outside the corporation a plot of land on which he says he will invest at least $10,000 in building greenhouses.

FIRE FROM BLISTERED GLASS.

It is reported that a fire recently was started in a peculiar manner at a greenhouse in Corry, Pa. Rays of the sun passing through a blister in the glass focussed on the woodwork and caused such intense heat that it ignited. Damage to the extent of several hundreds of dollars to buildings and stock resulted, before the flames could be extinguished.

SCHOOLS OF FLORICULTURE.

Please give the names and addresses of the schools at which a florist could get the best all-round practical knowledge of floriculture. J. F. D.

There are several schools and colleges offering courses in horticulture with more or less attention to floriculture. It is difficult to say which is best for any particular individual, as so much depends upon the person himself. Cornell University, at Ithaca, N. Y.; Ohio State University, Columbus, O., and Michigan Agricultural College, Lansing, Mich., are at this time the three institutions offering most advantages along this line.

L. C. C.

THE PRICE OF GLASS.

There was a meeting of the manufacturers of window glass at Pittsburg on Tuesday, October 2, for the purpose of discussing the prospects for the present season's fire. The glassmakers are careful to avoid any semblance of a trust, but it is understood the American Window Glass Co. will this season work in harmony with the independents and it was tacitly agreed to postpone the general resumption of glass production for thirty days. The manufacturers display an inclination to retain control of the market and hold prices firm by curtailing production.

CARNATION PLANTS WANTED.

Early in the season there was a slow sale for field-grown carnation plants, but in the last fortnight the demand has become exceptionally strong. It takes but a brief announcement of a surplus to clean out any grower who has desirable varieties. It appears that in many sections the plants did not do as well in the field as had been anticipated, and growers who had contemplated a surplus find themselves with insufficient stock for their own requirements. Also in many cases stem-rot has developed since the plants were benched and it is necessary for the growers to purchase stock to fill the vacancies. There is considerable good stock still to be had, for the frost has held off, and especially around Chicago the latter end of the season has been especially favorable for the growth of the plants.

LARGE FICUSES.

How will a person propagate Ficus elastica in a hot, dry house, where the plants are about eighteen feet high? I have girdled and wrapped them, with moss, etc., as I do small plants, but because of the lack of humidity in the atmosphere they failed to root. If I shade the house much they grow long and weak; when I give sun the moss dries off too rapidly. I fail to root more than one out of twenty-five or more. My trees are full of side shoots and should produce at once 300 or 400 plants. The trees I refer to are full of fruit and of course are not desirable for young plants, but I could cut off the limbs with the fruit, and then have plenty to propagate from. The fruit and trees are getting troublesome, so I am forced to cut them back. J. A. L.

At this season of the year there should not be any great difficulty in keeping the moss moist, even though the house is entirely unshaded. It would perhaps be better to use rather more moss on each cutting than would be used on small plants, making the finished lump of moss as large as a base ball, or thereabouts, and then sprinkling the moss with a hose three times a day, or four times, if necessary. It is naturally inconvenient to water the cuttings when they are so high up, and possibly they have not received their full quota.

I would prune the ficus quite hard in the spring, in order to bring them within bounds, keeping them rather dry for a few weeks prior to pruning, and then give the usual liberal watering, after which the plants would break freely.

W. H. TAPLIN.

MEXICAN TUBEROSE.

We are growing Mexican tuberose in a field. Most of the spikes come perfectly healthy and green, opening nicely, but a few have little pimples on the flower stalks. The buds are small and drawn. The small green leaves among buds turn brown, and they never make perfect spikes of flowers. Can you tell me what this is and what to do for them? The foliage, bulbs and roots of these look all right. C. & C.

This is the first time I have heard of any disease bothering the Mexican tuberose. The double variety, I might say, never opens with me here at all. The flowers seem to get some kind of a set-fast habit and stop growing just before they are ready to open and sometimes turn brown. Perhaps the disease is contagious in the more humid atmosphere of the region from which this query comes, and I cannot help but wonder if they have the genuine Mexican tuberose. F. T. RAMSEY.

SALT AS MANURE.

Will you please tell me whether sulphate of soda, commonly called saltcake, such as glass factories use in making glass, is beneficial to the ground and if so, how much of it should be used to an acre? I can get this saltcake from a glass plant here that has been destroyed by fire and has got wet, but I do not care to go to the expense of hauling it unless I am positive it is useful on land. C. W. E.

Sulphate of soda is known chemically as glauber salt, a saline laxative much used by veterinary surgeons. Silicate of soda is sold by druggists under the name of liquid glass. This in crystal form would be, in my opinion, utterly useless as a stimulant to any plant or vegetable crop. Magnesium sulphate, the common name of which is Epsom salts, has for years been used as a fertilizer for house plants and your local druggist should be able to tell you if this is the article you can get from the destroyed glass factory. You might use half a ton to the acre, but not on a growing crop. Sow it broadcast after crops are lifted in the fall, or early in the spring. W. S.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The market pursued its course steadily last week, but Saturday was active and Monday saw a pronounced increase in the demand, accompanied by a considerable shortening of supplies, due to cooler weather. The result was that not enough material was at hand to fill all orders and prices took a jump to such an extent that it gave many buyers quite a jolt. Shipping demand is excellent, much stock going to St. Louis and New Orleans, and all other towns are heard from with larger orders than heretofore this season. Locally the retailers report active business.

The demand for Beauties continues to be the feature of the market. Everyone wants Beauties and so many call for medium lengths that these are not plentiful enough to go around. Shorts go farther, and there are enough long-stemmed flowers so that anyone who wants to pay the price can get all he needs. Brides and Maids are less in number, but improved in quality and selling well. Prices have stiffened materially since last report, the improvement being most pronounced in lower grades. Richmond is abundant and selling well. Not many Liberty are seen. Chatenay is not so prominent as it was at this date last season.

At the first of this week carnation receipts became short of the demand for the first time this season. Naturally prices advanced rapidly. Some first-class Enchantress are seen, and a few good whites, but much of the stock still is small in flower and short in stem. Quantities of outdoor carnations still are received.

Only scattering lots of asters are seen and only now and then a bunch of gladoli. Dahlias are to be had but not many are wanted. Chrysanthemums still are limited to Monrovia and anything at all good brings $4 a dozen. Orders cannot all be filled. Violets are in daily receipt and show some improvement in color since colder weather came. Tuberose can be had until frost comes. Valley is not in request and not in large supply. All the leading retailers are using orchids more freely than last year.

Green stock is plentiful but the demand is brisk.

Horticultural Society's Supper.

The executive committee of the Horticultural Society of Chicago was the host at an informal supper at the Union Monday evening. The tables were decorated with fine vases of Mrs. Marshall Field rose, donated by Peter Reinberg. There was an attendance of nearly 100 and much enthusiasm was created, each one promising to do his share to make this year's show an even greater success than that of last year. The management outlined its plans, including all the good features of last year's exhibition and several new ones.

James Keeley, managing editor of the Tribune, was present and made a little talk full of good ideas. He was the originator of the model backyard scheme, which was so attractive last year. Mr. Keeley, who, by the way, had just returned from Tangiers, where he captured Banker Stensland, said that in his youthful days in England he had been aroused regularly before dawn to make the daily trip to Covent Garden market with the roses grown in his grandfather's greenhouses. He said he had always retained his interest in the trade and that it afforded him pleasure to renew associations with it.

Benjamin Hammond, secretary of the American Rose Society, was present and made a talk in its interest. When C. L. Washburn brought up the excellent idea of offering special inducements to exhibitors to keep their displays fresh through the week, Mr. Hammond offered $25 in two prizes for those who do best in that direction.

Manager Asmus, Press Representative Burdette and a number of others spoke of the work in hand and plans were given a good push forward.

Various Notes.

W. J. Smyth during the summer has put in a new store front, with two splendid large windows, one on Michigan avenue and one on Thirty-first street, greatly improving his facilities for display. He feels that the change will do much to help business, and thought the effect was already apparent, for he had a splendid fortnight at the middle of September, but last week was dull again. However, the slacking up gave him leisure to gain familiarity with the Autocar just added to his facilities for enjoying himself. Mr. Smyth has his summer home at Antioch.

Miss L. A. Tonner is busy completing the fall catalogue of supplies shortly to be issued by the A. L. Randall Co. The body of the book was prepared before Miss Tonner's trip to Europe, so it only remained to add the goods purchased on the other side, which now are arriving, to have the book ready for the press. W. W. Randall says they are more than pleased with the results in the supply department, particularly its effect on the cut flower end of the business, to which it every day is bringing new customers.

A. V. Jackson & Son, who gave up roses to devote all their attention to mushrooms, have had a change of heart. They used to give, if not a frosty, at least a cool reception to visitors seeking information as to the mushroom industry, but now the Jackson Mushroom Farm is advertising in farmers' weeklies: "I am the largest grower in America. Ten years' experience enables me to give practical instruction in the business worth many dollars to you. No matter what your occupation is or where you are located, here is an opportunity to acquire a thorough knowledge of this paying business. Send for free book giving particulars and information, how to start, cost, etc."

The Tribune last Sunday contained a picture two pages wide of the block on the north side of West Madison street, between Leavitt and Oakley, with a write-up to the effect that a person might be born, live to a ripe old age, and die there, without having to go off the block for any of the luxuries or necessities of life, George Asmus, at the Schiller place, being located there to supply the flowers.

The Sixty-third street station of the new Englewood branch of the South Side Elevated Railroad, soon to be opened, will be just across the street from A. I. Simmons' store and close to George Walther's, increasing the value of both stands.

Prof. Wm. Trelease, director of the Missouri Botanic Garden, St. Louis, is announced to speak at Fullerton hall, Art Institute, at 3 p. m. October 20, in the course of free Saturday lectures given by the Field Museum.

The latest west side store is that of Mrs. C. E. Warder, opened October 1, at 2018 Madison street.

The new range of Flint & Vogt, at Wilmette, is completed, planted with carnations and in fine shape. There are eight houses 27x140, built under the supervision of N. P. Miller. Mr. Flint is a brother-in-law of Assistant Chief of Police Schuettler.

N. P. Miller goes to Richmond, Ind., on Sunday to assume charge of the office of the Challenge Ventilator Co., while J. A. Evans makes a trip to California for the benefit of the health of himself and the business.

D. J. Murphy, since leaving Heim Bros., has been in charge of the estaband this year is no exception to the rule.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. soon will be as bad as the Chicago American, with its editions every time someone's foot slips; they had five shipments from the greenhouses on Monday.

E. Kroll, on Pensacola avenue, grows roses and is cutting good stock.

Riverview Park had a baby show last Sunday. The first prize was won by Katherine Zender, 2 years old, the daughter of Henry Zender and the niece of Peter Reinberg, Adam Zender and Leonard Kill.

E. C. Amling reports an exceptionally heavy demand for asparagus and smilax for fall decorations, possibly stimulated by the fact that wild smilax has become scarce since the storms in Alabama.

Mike Becker, on North Lincoln street, is one of the growers who pursues the even tenor of his ways year after year. His stock is in its usual good shape this fall and he expects a rather better season than usual.

Mike Rocklin, formerly at Hunt's and later in business with Harry Fisher at Kalamazoo, has been added to the force at Bassett & Washburn's, where business is first-class.

F. R. Hills opened his retail store at Oak Park last Saturday and is well pleased with the start.

On Saturday, September 29, Ruth A. Eaton and Chester Eaton were married. Their families are in no way related. Miss Eaton had for some time handled the correspondence at E. H. Hunt's.

L. Baumann & Co. supplied the autumn foliage decorative material used for Marshall Field's fall opening, including the large baskets of artificial fruit.

Miss Martha Gunterberg, who sells for the Guardian Angel Orphan Asylum, and does it well, has moved her stand in the Flower Market to the location formerly occupied by Johnson & Carlson.

A. L. Vaughan, of Vaughan & Sperry, has returned from his trip to New York.

Schroeder & Meyer opened in the Flower Market during the current week, handling carnations. Mr. Schroeder has charge of the selling end.

Visitors to the E. F. Winterson establishment say it looks natural to see John Degnan again at his desk there. The store has been much improved by the recent rearrangement of counters and office space.

Wietor Bros. last spring planted 15,000 Lawsons from pots and now are cutting some excellent flowers, much ahead of the recently transplanted stock. Their cut of Beauties also is large.

John Ziska, of the Chicago Rose Co., says there still is a large demand for the grass-growing figures and that retailers who make window displays of them make frequent repurchases.

Weiland & Risch say the call for Killarney is heavy again this season. They see no reason to change their previous opinion that this is about the most profitable rose on their list.

The Benthay-Coatsworth Co. is cutting good stock from Brides and Maids dried off during the summer.

George Wagner, on Indiana avenue, says September was considerably better than a year ago.

E. E. Pieser says Monday was a little Christmas.

H. N. Bruns is putting in a new store front, providing for much better display, and during the process having an "alteration sale" of palms and ferns.

John Zech says the pressure caused by increased demand and decreased supply is not at all to his liking. He has sympathy for the fellow who finds prices doubled over night.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The last week in September was a quite busy one among the retailers. We have had much needed rain, nearly three inches falling during two days. The opening of carnival week should help our trade. After this week the social season will open among the upper society and we hear of a number of orders booked for receptions, dinners and weddings. The veiled prophet's ball Tuesday night brought an extra demand for Beauties and fancy grades in other cut stock.

The market opened strong Monday. Stock of all kinds was limited and buyers were running from one house to the other trying to find supplies. This made things look encouraging for the week. As to roses, the market is still shy on fancy grades. Medium and short-stemmed grades are plentiful and the demand quite good. Many carnation growers are sending in first-class blooms. Stems are becoming longer. Good reds are scarce.

A few violets are coming in, but are small. Asters still are seen, but are poor. Tuberoses stalks and cosmos in small lots are now in. Yellow and white dahlias sell well. All other outdoor stock is about over for the season.

Various Notes.

J. F. Ammann was over from Edwardsville last week. He will be in Springfield, Ill., all this week.

Dr. Halstead, of the St. Clair Floral Co., Belleville, was over last week and reports that his new geranium, Sycamore, has sold well.

C. Young & Sons were busy Monday decorating the big hall of the Merchants' Exchange for the veiled prophet's ball. This is one of the largest jobs of the year in the decorative line.

Henry Ostertag had a few large downtown decorations which kept all hands busy last week. For good, downright hustling for this kind of work he is there with both feet.

R. J. Windler, on South Grand avenue, furnished two large wedding decorations on the south side last week. Store business also is good with him.

The Riessen Floral Co. was rushed last week with theater work, also for funerals and weddings.

A. J. Bentzen, of the Bentzen Floral Co., says he will have a fine lot of cyclamen plants this year. No one grows any better. A. Jablonsky again will be well supplied with extra fine plants of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine.

Henry Lohrenz, Jr., of the Park Floral Co., has his place in fine shape for the busy season.

George Waldbart says trade is gradually getting under way, but it needs frosty weather to become steady. He is cutting a nice lot of outdoor stock from his farm in Clayton. Cosmos is just coming in.

The Schuerman Floral Co. has the decorations for the horse show in the big exposition building.

F. W. Breunig, who recently bought a tract of land on the Illinois side near Columbia, is figuring on building a range of modern greenhouses next spring. Mr. Breunig has a fine business in South St. Louis, where he has a number of greenhouses at the corner of Gravois and Mississippi avenue, and has a good reputation as a grower.

The Florists' Club members should not forget the meeting which takes place next Thursday afternoon, October 11, at 2 o'clock. President Irish expects a large attendance. The four discussions, one each by Messrs. Weber, Windler, Schray and Guy alone should assure a large attendance. A change in the by-laws also should attract the attention of those interested in the welfare of the club. J. J. B.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The first chill breath of autumn put life into the wholesale cut flower market. Either for this reason or because of an unexpected falling off in shipments, the last days of last week saw everything of value sold and a healthier tone in the whole market was apparent. Some think this condition can be depended on to last, while others view with fear the oncoming hosts of the chrysanthemums, and prophesy a retrograde movement. At any rate the improvement was a welcome one, even if it should not prove permanent. Beauties especially were benefited, the best touching 50 cents and $4 a dozen being the general asking price. Brides and Maids, too, were scarce and valuable.

Carnations are improving rapidly. Some fine stock is arriving at John Young's from the Cottage Gardens. Victory maintains its place among the reds at A. J. Guttman's and is as popular as ever.

Dahlia week was productive of a fine exhibition at the American Institute and a general demand by the retailers. The best single and cactus varieties brought excellent prices. Even violets amounted to something Saturday and a few commanded 50 cents a hundred. The quality still is poor. The second crop will arrive quite early enough for the demand and this should really be the first shipment that is made.

The asters are gone, even the 16,000 in the cellars of J. K. Allen having all been absorbed. Gladioli, too, have disappeared. Orchids in many popular varieties are abundant. The out-of-town orders for this kingly flower grow in number daily. Few chrysanthemums are arriving. By the end of the week the vanguard is expected.

The market closed strong on Monday night. In other words the demand exceeded the supply, and here and there carnations, Brides, Maids and Beauties touched high water mark for the season; $8 per hundred for Maids and $3 for Enchantress in some places was the asking price, and the good ones were snapped up quickly. The general sentiment of the street was hopeful, and many thought the days of depression were over.

Judging by the retailers' displays, everyone anticipates a large demand for decorative ferns of every variety, cibotium, Whitmani, Tarrytown, Scottii and Boston. They all are here in abundance and some fine banks of them are on exhibition in the windows, lit up by brilliant crotons in gorgeous shades and colorings.

American Institute Show.

The American Institute exhibition last week in quantity and beauty of display far exceeded the limited space at disposal. Quantities of exhibits never were unpacked at all because of this, and something must be done to remedy these unsatisfactory conditions or there will be an end to patience and no response at all from the leading growers of the vicinity. This year several of the largest firms were conspicuous by their absence. The exhibits made, however, were uniformly good. The F. R. Pierson Co. had a fine collection of dahlias of the pompon varieties. J. T. Lovett had an extensive exhibit of dahlias, and captured many prizes. His boxes of herbaceous varieties were not opened.

R. Vincent, Jr., and daughter were here from White Marsh, Md., with a grand stock, so crowded for room as to be unable to do itself justice. John Lewis Childs, of Floral Park, had gladioli, tritomas and tuberous begonias. Ellwanger & Barry made their usually extensive display of apples, pears, etc. The vegetable showing was up-to-date and Scott, of Tarrytown, Marshall, the Rickards brothers and Joe Manda were converted to vegetarianism. Lager & Hurrell had the only show of orchids, a most interesting variety. A. J. Manda, of the Pratt estate, Brooklyn, made the only exhibit of stove plants, foliage plants and nepenthes, a most creditable display. H. F. Burt, W. P. Lothrop, George Hale and James Dowlan were the other exhibitors.

Various Notes.

Monday evening at the club-rooms in the Grand opera house a fine exhibit of orchids and early chrysanthemums is expected and all exhibitors will be welcome and their displays properly staged. Dahlias, too, will be exhibited. With reminiscences of the Dayton convention and a special effort by the popular caterer and some songs by the Rickards brothers the evening promises to be an interesting one. Shipments of exhibits may be made in care of John Young, the secretary, at his wholesale store on Twenty-eighth street.

The New York branch stores at Newport are closing. The principals are back in their city stores. Mr. and Mrs. Leikens returned on Monday. Mr. Smythe, of Wadley & Smythe, has purchased the Ammann place at Yonkers, now called the Yonkers Nursery Co. Specimen evergreen and deciduous trees and shrubs will be grown extensively.

Walter Mott assumed his position with H. H. Berger & Co. on Monday. He starts on an extended trip immediately.

Perkins & Schumann have removed their headquarters to the Coogan building, Twenty-sixth street and Sixth avenue. Here they will have better facilities and have been fortunate in securing a three years' lease of the store, which is on the ground floor and next door to the entrance of the Cut Flower Exchange.

eightth street, has enlarged his space and his growing business needs it. He is handling fine rose stock from his own place and from other expert growers at Madison.

A. Warendorff has fully recovered from his severe illness and this week returns to the city, with his family, from his summer home at Averne. The funeral of the vice-president of Mt. Sinai hospital, where Mr. Warendorff was operated upon, took place on Sunday and many handsome floral offerings were sent from his establishment.

The Geller Co.'s importations are arriving daily. Last week many cases of the Spanish cork bark of Mr. Geller's own selection were on exhibition.

The Florists' Employees' Association has decided to hold its annual ball Saturday evening, January 5, at the Manhattan Casino, One Hundred and Fifty-fifth street and Eighth avenue.

Siebrecht & Son expect to have their store on East Thirty-seventh street ready for occupancy this week.

The Rosary is handling a splendid assortment of the new single and cactus dahlias from Mr. Troy's nursery at New Rochelle. An abundance of bays, boxwood and rustic work stretches for half a block on each side of the rustic store, the most unique of its kind in the country.

John Scott, president of the New York Florists' Club, again is busy building and rebuilding, with evident ambitions toward a plant of 100,000 square feet, a tribute to the Scottii fern, with which his prosperity is largely identified.

Robert G. Wilson's big store and conservatory at Gates and Fulton streets, Brooklyn, have been completely redecorated and make the largest and handsomest of the retail places in the City of Churches. Mr. Wilson has some large weddings booked for this month. Mr. Nugent, formerly with Condon & Phillips, is in charge of the greenhouse department.

A goodly crowd attended the auction sale of orchids at Elliott's on Tuesday.

Thorburn & Co. had a fine display of vegetables at the dahlia show last week in the American Institute. Their new store now is in perfect order. In its four stories, basement and subcellar, it covers 25,000 square feet of space. Its two entrances, on Barclay street and Park place, make it most convenient. The offices on the second floor are roomy and light and elegantly fitted. It is one of the roomiest and handsomest seed stores in America.

P. R. B. Pierson, of Tarrytown, died September 25, aged 78 years. He was the father of Frank R., Lincoln B. and Paul M. Pierson, known by all in the trade, and also leaves a widow and three daughters. He was an engraver, but had done much work in raising seedling cannas.

COVINGTON, KY.—The Covington Seed Co. has this summer and fall erected, in connection to its range, three new iron-frame houses, one 24x120, one 24x105 and one 18x105, making 9,600 square feet, all on concrete walls. A new potting shed and workroom 15x72 is now under way. A No. 7 Furman boiler will be installed to heat the new houses.

The Market.

Business is moving along in a way that is pleasing to all. The demand for flowers of all kinds is good and there is a fair supply. The call for outdoor flowers is brisk and asters especially have a steady call. Good white and purple sell at sight and at fine prices. Dahlias also are going well and bringing good prices. Carnations are just about equal to the demand and more could be used to good advantage. Some nice Enchantress sell fast. As is usual at this time of the year, white flowers sell best, but red ones have an unusually heavy call. Mums are not yet seen regularly on the market, but by October 10 they should be in regular supply. Polly Rose and Glory of Pacific will be the first to be had in quantity and they will sell from $2 to $3 per dozen. With the cool weather we now are having, mums will be welcome and ought to sell fast.

Various Notes.

Saturday, October 13, will be the next regular meeting of the Cincinnati Florists' Society and a well attended meeting is expected. The flower shows usually given by the society will be talked over and it will be decided whether these shows shall be continued on the same lines that they have been in the past.

The Market.

Conditions show considerable improvement since last week and stock is moving out much better. In roses, summer sorts, such as Kaiserin and Carnot, will soon be over. Some of the former are, however, still notably good. American Beauties are somewhat higher and sell well. Some nice Richmond and Liberty are arriving and meet with a fairly good sale. Chatenay and Wellesley are both seen of excellent quality for the season. Carnations improve in size and length of stem and are selling a little higher. Some chrysanthemums arrive daily and bring $1.50 to $2 per dozen for the best. Single violets are fairly abundant and the first doubles appeared September 29. The average price is 50 cents per hundred.

Some gladioli at $3 to $5 still are coming in. A fair number of asters continue to arrive, varying from 50 cents to $1.50 per hundred. Lily of the valley is a little higher, at $3 to $4. Cornflowers bring 25 cents per hundred. Easter lilies are not too plentiful, at $10 to $12.50 per hundred. There is some improvement in the call for green stock, but no change in prices.

Welch Bros. Move.

On October 1 Welch Bros. opened for business in their handsome and commodious new quarters at 226 Devonshire street. Choice hardy evergreens in tubs were arranged outside, while pyramidal bays of large size were used inside the new store, which was also handsomely decorated for the occasion. Large numbers of florists and other interested visitors attended on the opening day and all were enthusiastic in praise of the splendid new quarters. The two cold storage rooms 15x55 and 12x45, will fill a long-felt want. A dynamo in the basement furnishes power for supplying the cold air. Everything in the way of appointments is thoroughly up-to-date, and it must be exceedingly gratifying to the genial and persevering trio of brothers to find that their labors of the last twenty years have enabled them to occupy such a splendid location on one of Boston's most high class business streets.

It marks a distinct advance in Boston's commission cut flower business to find that it is not now necessary to occupy stores in small side streets inconvenient of access, but that the great and growing wholesale flower industry should be given a prominent place on the busiest streets. Welch Bros.' bold move is a commendable one and merits the success it is bound to attain.

Various Notes.

The garden committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society visited the estate of Mrs. J. L. Gardner, in Brookline, September 28, it being entered for the Hunnewell triennial premium. Owing to the lateness of the visit the outside gardens were not seen at their best. In the greenhouses large and fine stocks of primulas, cyclamens, azaleas, Lorraine begonias, eupatoriums, acacias, ericas, etc., were noted. In the orchid house, dendrobium, Phalaenopsis Schrod-er-ae, Vanda cœrulea, Cattleya labiata and C. Bowringiana made a nice show. A batch of the pretty Saintpaulia ionantha was effective. The stove house contained a well grown collection of ornamental foliage plants. Chrysanthemums in pots appeared to be all right for the coming show, and William Thatcher, the head gardener, seemed to have everything in excellent condition.

The Boston Co-operative Flower Market now is located on the first floor at Music Hall place. The new quarters, which were occupied on October 1, are a great improvement over the old ones.

Alfred H. Wagland, of Lawrence, returned from a European trip September 19. Two days later he was the proud father of twins.

Seed stores report a big call for bulbs. Narcissi are in special request, and cables for additional supplies have been forwarded for some sorts to Holland.

Thomas Pegler, of Wollaston, brought in the first Campbell violets to the Park street market September 30.

The fall demand for trees and shrubs promises this season to break all records. Local nurseries report an excellent call for both these and herbaceous perennials.

At the meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club on October 16 J. B. Velie, of the Lord & Burnham Co., will speak on "Greenhouse Construction."

Field-grown carnation plants appear to be unusually scarce this fall, Lawson particularly so. Many growers finding their stock smaller than usual, planted rather thicker and had little surplus left.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Conditions have improved decidedly, the market being unusually bare last Saturday evening. The change in weather this week, shortening the supply, produced quite a scarcity of many varieties of flowers. The demand was excellent, dahlias seeming especially popular and selling as they have not sold so far this season. Carnations were also in good demand. White roses were scarce, while choice Maids, Killarney and Beauties were excellent stock. Orchids and valley are both selling well. Callas have made their appearance. Harrisii lilies are more abundant than they have been for some time, but owing to the excellent demand they appear scarce. Violets are becoming more plentiful, though they are hardly important enough to quote at present. Chrysanthemums have not materially increased, but we are told that by the end of the week they will be in good supply.

Look Out for Kentias.

Last week the following paragraph appeared in the Philadelphia letter of the American Florist:

Look out for kentias. Almost all of the palm growers in this city are sold out of the 7-inch pot sizes in finished plants. There is plenty coming on, but stock for immediate use is not in sight hereabouts.

The editor was so much impressed with this note that he supplemented it in the same issue, as follows:

Our Philadelphia correspondent reports a scarcity of 7-inch and 10-inch kentias in his section.

This seems serious for a district that prides itself on supplying a large part of the country with Philadelphia palms. Inasmuch as the REVIEW was carrying a half-page advertisement headed "Special Values in Dreer Palms," containing among other varieties an assortment of Kentia Forsteriana, both single and made-up plants, in from 7-inch to 10-inch pots, with "Henry A. Dreer, 714 Chestnut St., Philadelphia," at the bottom, this news was rather startling. It was Sunday afternoon, so the store was closed, but Phil started straightway for Riverton, with his favorite pipe in one pocket and a sandwich in the other, to ascertain whether all the kentias had really been sold. A careful inspection of the palm houses revealed the fact that there were not less than 25,000 kentias, Forsteriana and Belmoreana, in from 7-inch to 10-inch pots. The question then arose, were they finished plants? A half dozen, picked at random from the tables, and placed on the floor where they could be seen to advantage, convinced Phil that even the most critical buyer could not say that they needed finishing. It therefore became obvious that the Philadelphia correspondent of the American Florist had not crossed the river before he wrote the note in question.

At the Flower Market.

The question has been asked: "Who will do business in the old Flower Market building, now that the Market itself has been moved west of Broad street?" Inquiry there shows that Wm. J. Moore, Berger Bros., D. T. Connor (Lord & Burnham Co.), Wm. Stevens (John Burton), Edw. Lindville (W. K. Harris), Samuel Lilley (E. Weiss), and Edgar Upton (J. W. Young) will continue to do business there.

A Chat With Mr. Strohle.

Geo. A. Strohle, of Henry A. Dreer Co., went abroad early in July, returning, as chronicled in this column, last month, after spending ten weeks on the other side. He made a point of asking the English palm growers and importers about the much talked of monopoly in kentia seeds. They told him they believed there was something in it, but doubted whether it would affect the market seriously. The same question put direct to Mr. Sander, at Bruges, Belgium, elicited the response that the deal was off.

The Belgium growers have fewer of the marketable sizes of kentias than usual this year. They grew less seed several years ago, preferring to take up araucarias, etc. Now they have been obliged to import small kentias from England, and are sowing seed in such large quantities that an abundance of kentias is assured in the near future.

The labor question abroad is affecting the seed growers seriously. In the Quedlinburg district they brought a large colony of young women from Poland to pick the seeds, boarding them on the farms during the harvest. Children also were employed a half day at a time in this way.

The azaleas were plentiful and fine. Madame Van der Cruyssen is abundant, but the best white varieties are less plentiful. Specimen plants are rather scarce. The French buyers prefer naturally grown azaleas. These are used in August's weather debts have been paid to us by September.

Chas. E. Schackerman is the latest acquisition to the force of M. Rice & Co.

Godfrey Aschmann has favored Phil with a pictorial post-card from St. Gotthard, Switzerland.

Wm. R. Gibson has resigned his position in Charleston, S. C., and is now in this city considering possibilities.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. are sparing no effort to make their new building the most completely equipped of its kind in the country.

Wm. F. Bassett & Sons, Hammon, N. J., are sending some of the finest dahlias coming to this market to the Leo Niessen Co.

The S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co. has sent out its business announcements beautifully illustrated with views of the store and cold storage plant.

The Florists' Protective Association held a meeting last Thursday evening, which made it clear that united action could not be secured at this time. It is probable that the association will be dissolved. This is a step backward.

The annual meeting of the Florists' Club was held last Tuesday evening. The club resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider plans for holding the convention of the S. A. F. in this city next August. The following officers were elected: President, Samuel S.

Pennock; vice-president, Fred Hahman; secretary, Edwin Lonsdale; treasurer, J. Wm. Colflesh.

Edw. Reid has improved his store arrangements by changing his refrigerator. He has been busy with shipping orders this week. Lilium Harrisii is a specialty here.

W. E. McKissick is combining natural grasses with dahlias from David Herbert & Son, Atco, N. J. He also is receiving locally grown white ostrich plume asters, a rarity now.

Three hundred cases of azaleas were received at Riverton this week and many more are expected shortly.

B. Eschner has once more returned to brighten life for his friends in the Quaker City.

Charles W. Turnley, the well known florist of Camden, died recently.

Hubert W. Johnson has sent out a circular letter to his constituents setting forth the advantages to be derived from dealing with his company.

Philip Freud, of H. F. Michell Co., has been looking over the field in New York. He believes Michell's is thoroughly up-to-date.

Among the growers seen in town this week are Alphonse Pericat, of Collingdale; John Savage, of Gwynedd, and James Verner, of Garrettford.

INDICT LETTUCE GROWERS.

The grand jury at Jefferson, O., on September 27 returned an indictment against members of the Ashtabula Lettuce Growers' Association, who are charged with an unlawful combination to control the price of the outputs of crops grown under glass, notably lettuce, tomatoes and cucumbers. The men indicted are Ernest E. Dunbar, Charles Hopkins, R. W. Griswold Jr., Frank Luce, Edwin A. Adams, Jay Adams, R. Wilson Rogers and F. and William Stone.

CUCUMBERS.

The soil for cucumbers, says L. C. Corbett, in Bulletin No. 254 of the Department of Agriculture, should be a rich compost which would fall under the classification of a sandy loam. Sods from an old pasture with a good turf overtopping a clay loam, composted with about one-third the bulk of cow manure, to which, at the time of placing it in the greenhouse, about fifteen per cent of its bulk of sand is added, should make a good soil for cucumbers. From time to time during the growth of the cucumbers they should be watered with liquid manure from a leach containing fresh horse manure and sheep manure. It should be the aim of the grower to keep the plants in the most vigorous possible condition.

There are a number of methods of seed sowing practiced by successful cucumber growers, all of which have some advantages. Three of the more common methods are as follows: (1) To plant the seeds of cucumbers in the soil of the bench where the plants are to grow and mature; (2) to plant the seeds of the cucumbers in 3-inch or 4-inch pots filled about half full of soil and after the seeds have germinated and the hypocotyl, or stem of the seedling, has elongated to fill the pots well up to the seed leaves with soil; (3) and to plant the seeds in cups similar to those used for harvesting strawberries, except that the cups for this purpose are usually made of Georgia pine.

In the first case, where the seeds are planted directly in the soil on the benches, cucumbers are usually employed as a crop to follow lettuce, seeds being planted in the lettuce benches before the crop is entirely removed, heads of lettuce being taken out at proper distances to allow for the correct spacing of the cucumber plants, and the seeds of the cucumbers planted in the areas so left.

In the other two cases the rearing of the plants for forcing purposes can be carried on in a small house specially designed for this purpose or in a general propagating house, thus obviating the necessity of heating and maintaining normal conditions in the growing house during the period previous to which the plants begin to run.

ALTHOUGH we are vegetable growers only, we cannot afford to be without your paper.—SIMEON B. CHESTER, Brooklyn, O.

A NEW PINK FREESIA.

Up to four years ago botanists regarded all known varieties of freesia as belonging to the one variable species, F. refracta, but a very distinct pink or lilac-flowered kind having been found in Cape Colony, it was given the name of F. Armstrongi. It is still very scarce, small corms costing 75 cents each in Europe. Some specimens were received from a Holland dealer, says Dr. Van Fleet in the Rural New Yorker, but they turned out to be diseased, and never started into growth. Later two corms, fresh from an African collector, were sent over by the dealer, and one started its first leaf in February, opening its blooms late in April. It makes a neat plant, about a foot high. The leaves are small and darker green than those of F. refracta. The flowers are considerably smaller in size and of a bright and pleasing rosy lilac with yellow throat and blotch. The fragrance is characteristic, but much less pronounced than in our familiar varieties. This plant bore thirty-two blooms on five branches; many were open at the same time, and made a good decorative effect. We pollenized the flowers with the best examples of F. refracta at hand, but this crossing has already been made in Holland, and the offspring has even been exhibited under the name of Freesia Tubergeni. The hybrid is said to be very fine; the blooms large and freely produced, of a very acceptable pink shade with conspicuous yellow throat, while the rich fragrance of refracta is well retained. Florists say colored freesias are never likely to be useful for their purposes, but they will certainly be wanted by amateurs and window gardeners. Freesia Armstrongi is a very welcome addition to our short list of fragrant winter-blooming plants, and its hybrids are certain of great appreciation, if they are real improvements on the species.

THE BEST PHLOXES.

Elmer D. Smith, Adrian, Mich., has made something of a study of phloxes and has selected the following list from the large number now in commerce, to cover the best colors and other necessary features:

Amphitryon, lilac, suffused white; large; two and one-half to three feet high.

Astier Rehu, bright, deep purple, light shadings, two and one-half to three feet.

Attraction, snow white, rosy crimson eye, two to two and one-half feet.

Aquilon, carmine rose, crimson center, two to two and one-half feet.

Atala, clear dark pink, light center, one and one-half to two feet.

Baron Von Burkhart, bright rose flowers in immense heads, two and one-half feet.

Coquelicot, fine pure scarlet, crimson eye, two and one-half feet.

THE LUNARIA.

E. Rudowsky, of Dresden, Germany, comments on the fact that American florists are just beginning to make use of Lunaria biennis, the moonwort, which is extensively employed by German decorators. Mr. Rudowsky is the largest European grower of this specialty, supplying it to all the principal firms on the continent of Europe, including the leading retail florists of London, Paris, and Vienna, who use the pods when dried. He says he recently has had calls for them from leading New York retailers. The demand is always large and he says orders must be placed a year in advance. The peculiarity of the seed-pod is such as to attract much attention. The seed is enclosed in a transparent, skinlike seed-pod nearly two inches across. It can be cut with these balloon-like seed-pods in sprays of from twelve to forty-eight inches in length, which in Germany have a value of from 10 cents to $1 per bunch.

The plants also are useful and the sprays may be cut while the flowers are in bloom, which is early in May. The blossoms are a pleasing violet color and throughout Europe it is considered as an especially valuable decorative material. Mr. Rudowsky grows stems nearly five feet high, with as many as 600 of the orbs on the plant at one time. Of course, the best quality is most in demand and hardest to supply in quantity. The plant requires close attention from the time of seed-sowing until ripening the seed-pods and is sensitive to climatic changes as well as having many enemies which require close attention.

MANURES FOR BULBS.

The belief was general a few years ago that manure in any state was bad for bulbs. This theory has been disproved in the last two or three years, however, and now much manure is used in bulb forcing. In one large English market some exceptionally fine tulips and narcissi were recently shown, which looked almost like different, improved varieties. On inquiry it was found, however, that they were from common bulbs, but had been fed with phosphate manures in the case of the narcissi, and ammoniacal manures for the tulips. While the bulbs were standing outside in boxes, they were heavily mulched with spent stable manure and sawdust; the growers relying solely upon planting forcing bulbs in a bit of good, clean, mellow loam or good ordinary garden soil. A perfect soil for forcing bulbs is made of first a layer a foot thick of good garden soil or fresh pasture loam, then a thick sprinkling of phosphate and ammonia manure, on the top of that a layer of about six inches of stable manure and another layer of an inch or two of lime, repeating the process of layers, the whole to be stacked in the open and left undisturbed during the first twelve months; during the second year it should be turned and mixed some two or three times, after which it is ready for use.

Good results are obtained in the case of outdoor bulbs by manuring a plot of ground the first year with twenty-five tons of stable manure and growing a crop of beans or something similar, planting tulips the second year and narcissi the third, giving a good dressing before turning over the soil, of phosphate manures to the extent of about 400 pounds per acre. Blooms and growth have been fully fifty per cent better. A slight addition of sulphate of potash for use on outdoor bulbs or bulbs not intended to be forced very hard will considerably increase the substance and intensity of coloring of the bloom.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

The market has been a little erratic this week, while demand has been fair. The first part of the week roses were much in evidence, with but slight call. Some excellent Beauties have been shown. The select Kaiserin coming in from several of the growers could not be improved upon. All roses now are improving in quality. Gate, Chatenay, La Detroit and Killarney are excellent, while Brides, Maids and Liberty continue small and lack the quality that ensures their lasting any length of time. Richmonds are coming along fairly well, while that superb winter rose, Gen. MacArthur, is utterly worthless at this season.

The first violets of the season put in their appearance last week, which has stimulated the call that has been felt this week. The variety shown, Gov. Herrick, were sent in by W. A. Calhoun, of East Cleveland. This variety has proved a big money-maker for Mr. Calhoun, and he has gone into it heavier this year than ever. He cautions growers to keep this variety in pots plunged throughout the summer and not to permit too much head growth to obtain best results.

Dahlias now are much in evidence and are getting finer every day since the advent of several soaking rains and cool, dewy nights. Wm. Smith, of West Madison avenue, is sending in some superb stock at present. The secret of his success in handling this flower is knowing how to cut the stock, careful handling and delivering it in perfect condition to the store man. The result is Mr. Smith's stock commands the top price of the market. Dahlias cannot be handled like pig-iron.

Last week we saw some beautiful funeral wreaths made up entirely of dahlias. Several of them were made of three shades of pink, from the light to dark, and with a lavish use of adiantum the effect was beautiful. We regret that none of the growers hereabouts have been successful with that peerless variety, Twentieth Century, as there is nothing at this season of year makes a more striking table decoration than well-grown flowers of that variety.

Chrysanthemums have not put in their appearance yet. Most of the growers are ten days later than usual with this flower. F. C. Bartels will send in the first cut of Polly Rose the latter part of this week, which will be followed closely by numerous other growers.

Various Notes.

G. M. Naumann is showing the finest bench of Lorraine begonia to be seen anywhere. The plants are in perfect health and give promise of exhibition flowers later on. Begonias and cyclamen are Mr. Naumann's hobby, both of which he does exceedingly well.

The James Eadie Co. is doing business in its elegant new corner store on Euclid avenue. They have a double window frontage on the avenue and a well-lighted rear entrance on the side street, which is much appreciated since the removal from their cramped location on Erie street.

THE REVIEW has pleased me very much.—C. R. KIDD, Utica, Mich.

THE WHITE FLY.

With ferns under glass the white fly is a terrible nuisance, since not only does it in the larva form disfigure and impoverish the plants by gnawing the epidermis and befouling them, but the adult fly is even more voracious, so that infested plants become pervaded with sinuous white marks, somewhat like those caused by leaf miners, and get entirely unhealthy. In unheated houses the fly disappears entirely in the late autumn, but it leaves an abundance of eggs in the fronds, and if these be evergreen, they constitute a harborage whence a new generation issues the following season. On deciduous ferns the eggs perish with the fronds. Early in April the eggs hatch and the young flies can then be detected as minute whitish insects like thrips, to which family indeed the pests belong. In this state they travel but little, but about the middle of May they attain full larval size, and then change into the winged form, speedily flit about snipe fashion and lay their eggs freely in all directions. Fumigation with nicotine extract is fatal to them, but it is evident that when the flying period commences it is preceded by a period of dormancy during which the insect is immune, and hence though all the active forms are killed, a few days later some individuals appear on the wing, and these are quite sufficient to reinstate the plague. Hence a second fumigation is required. This year, however, taught by experience, we waited until the last week in April, when presumably all the eggs of last year were hatched, and the young brood about half grown, and then fumigated. The result, we are glad to say, was absolute riddance, and the strictest subsequent search has failed to find a single survivor, even on the worst infested plants. This was due to the fact that a time was selected when the whole community was at our mercy, and none of them had reached the stage of protective dormancy aforesaid. — Gardeners' Magazine.

Seed Trade News.AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va.; First Vice-Pres., Charles Burge, Toledo, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 25th annual meeting will be held at New York City, June, 1907.

VISITED CHICAGO.—Hjalmar Hartmann, Copenhagen, Denmark.

It has often been shown that seeds can be given away in a satisfactory manner, but to sell them satisfactorily needs the study of years.

LARGE onions are selling for $1 per hundred pounds in the Chicago market. This, the market gardeners agree, is a good figure for fall delivery.

ONION seed of the red and yellow flat sorts will be more plentiful than the Globe varieties; both Globe and flat whites will be exceedingly short.

REPORTS from the bean growing stations indicate that beans of all kinds will average well. No oversupply but, barring some of the wax sorts, enough to go around.

THE turnip-shaped radishes, especially the forcing varieties, are exceedingly short. California is about the only radish-growing district in the world which has any sort of a radish-seed crop this season.

AGAIN there is complaint that the celery crop is developing about 25 per cent of hollow stalks. The complaint is not confined to the self-blanching kinds, but takes in the late-keeping winter sorts as well.

THE importations of seeds of Bermuda onion are in from Teneriffe. The demand, which was strong a couple of seasons ago, now is reported as almost nil, for the southern truckers will use the Bermuda only as a last resort.

ONION sets are moving off well at good prices. It is reported from Louisville that much of the product at that point is in poor condition, owing to wet weather and poor storage facilities. The product of other points is reported to be carrying well.

Most varieties of peas are milling out equal to expectations, and the estimates of a month ago are being realized. There is not likely to be any shortage of the round varieties, but in wrinkled sorts there will be a shortage of from twenty-five to forty per cent.

ROCHESTER is the Mecca to which those interested in flower seeds have been journeying the last fortnight. What has been seen of asters at Vick's has pleased.

O. H. R. WIESE, manager of David Sachs, Quedlinburg, Germany, sails for home today, after one of the most successful tours of the United States he ever has made. He spent last week in New York City.

A PRESS dispatch from Aberdeen, S. D., tells of the result when John Olafsson and his wife received the bulky catalogue of "a Chicago general mail order house." John ordered liver pills and Mary sent for sweet pea seeds. The package arrived with utmost promptness. In the course of time a doctor dug up some of the sweet pea seeds in John's vermiform appendix, but the garden never showed any ill effects from the planting of the liver pills.

SANTA CLARA, CAL.—Edward Dungan, of Wm. Henry Maule, of Philadelphia, has been visiting the seed growers in this valley.

JOHN STERNS shipped from Hiawatha, Kan., to Chicago a car of clover seed containing 600 bushels, for which his check was $3,700.

ON September 22 the steamer, City of Alpena, took from Cheboygan, Mich., 1,300 bags of peas, consigned to D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit.

A. R. PETAR, of Ann Arbor, Mich., has leased the L. W. Jefferson residence, Penryn, at San Jose, Cal. He is to be manager of the Braslan seed farm in the San Juan valley.

J. M. CLARK, secretary of the Leonard Seed Co., Chicago, has returned from Brighton, N. Y., where he was called September 18 by the death of his father, 80 years old, an old-time gardener well known on Staten Island.

STURGEON BAY, WIS.—John Davis, of the W. W. Barnard Co., was at Washington Island last week looking after the shipment of peas to the warehouse in this city. T. H. Hopkins, manager of the Allan Seed Co., was at Baileys Harbor on the same mission.

STURGEON BAY, WIS.—The W. W. Barnard Co. and the John H. Allan Seed Co. employ over 100 girls in their picking rooms in this city. Many of these come from the towns throughout the county. They are employed for four months or more and average $4.50 a week. This means the distribution of about $600 each week for wages.

SEED LEAGUE PRICE ESTIMATES.

Burnet Landreth, Bristol, Pa., secretary of the Wholesale Seedsmen's League, has sent the following circular to members, dated September 22:

"In view of the exceeding short crops of onion seed and cucumber, and a deficiency in the supply of melon seeds, the board of directors put on record their opinion that the value of these seeds have greatly advanced, and suggest the following as the probable values at this date in lots of ten (10) pounds, with a decided possibility of further enhancement.

LATEST ON PEAS AND BEANS.

W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, Mich., writes October 1, as follows: "Late varieties of peas are not holding up to a normal yield. Receipts of beans so far do not come up to estimates, and indications are that the yield will not, in some cases, fill contract orders. The excessively dry and hot weather for the last two months has reduced the number of beans in the pods as well as the size of the beans."

S. M. Pease, president of the Cleveland Seed Co., Avon, N. Y., writes under date of October 1: "The pea harvest is pretty well along; probably fifty per cent of the crops have been threshed and delivered. It is generally understood that the best yields are usually delivered promptly, while the short crops are generally the last to come to hand.

If this is true of this season, it would go to show that the unfinished deliveries will come in very shy, as those that have been delivered are not up to the average by any means. The three weeks of hot suns that we had during the filling season shortened the pods and shortened the peas in the pods considerably.
The early varieties of peas show a much larger yield than the later or longpodded sorts, which cannot help but be extremely light on the average. It is our impression that peas will be in great demand and at better paying prices.

"The bean crop was harvested in good condition, having ideal weather for that purpose. Now the farmers are waiting for the threshing machines to come around. As but few farmers have threshed as yet it is impossible to judge the yield. Green pods will, undoubtedly, be plentiful enough, but wax sorts will not be up to the average. They were pinched by the drought during the filling season, but doubtless on the whole there will be enough to satisfy all demands."

I HIGHLY appreciate your paper and consider it one of the best, if not the best, published for the seedsmen.—AR-

EUROPEAN SEED NOTES.

The harvest of seed crops in England now is about over and it is a long time since seeds of all classes matured so quickly. This will no doubt still further lighten the yield of many crops. The to the young plants required for next year's seed crop. As to the turnip fly,

I bear in mind a crop of swedes with seed-bed stage, but a very weak but frequent dressing of Paris green was an effectual remedy. Although this dressing is so simple and easy of application, it is seldom used among English seedsmen, the method being hardly known. As a rule swede and turnip growers suffer in silence, preferring to sow another batch and trust to circumstances to carry it through the seed-bed stage.

A decided shortage of asters is reported in almost all varieties and German growers expect to ask a high figure again this year. Italian crops are reported as being good; in fact, much better than usual, and it is a significant fact that my latest reports to hand this morning speak of some heavy recent purchases and inquiries in Italy from Germany, in addition to some quantities already growing on contract for growers and exporters in that country.

Further confirmation is continually coming to hand of the already reported shortage in many seed crops. There is no mistaking the fact that radish seed will be radish seed during the coming season, and the like remark may certainly apply to onion and cauliflower and also in a lesser degree to spinach, leek, beet, and mangel. SEARS-ROEBUCK TO RETIRE.

Sears, Roebuck & Co., Chicago, the first of the great general mail order houses to enter the catalogue seed trade, also will be first to retire.

It having been rumored in the trade that the firm would withdraw, the REVIEW sought authoritative information. J. Rosenwald, vice-president of the corporation, supplied it October 2, as follows:

"Due to certain circumstances attending the development of our business, we are contemplating retiring from the seed trade temporarily," with the accent on the temporarily. "It is a matter of small moment to the seed trade, for we had not got far enough into the business to have any wide effect. Our contracts for 1907 stock are not large and are widely spread."

as of not much importance is likely to look much larger to seedsmen. From another reliable, if not so authoritative source, it is learned that contracts for crops soon to be delivered will somewhat exceed $30,000 in the aggregate, which coincides fairly well with the report current in the trade as to the amount of business done last season. bean growers, with others for Nebraska, Connecticut and southern specialties, and cover all requirements for a fairly complete line. The quantities are large. It appears that the contracts generally were placed at low prices, a big block of onion among them, and it is quite likely that within the next ninety days Sears, Roebuck & Co. can job off the stock with a much better showing than they last year were able to make in the mail trade.

SEED SELECTION.

A writer in the Journal of Horticulture raises an interesting question of the seed trade in reference to possibilities of selection, for improvement in the size, shape, weight and color of all classes of seeds used by growers. This is a subject which in Europe at least receives far too little study and attention, leaving out perhaps two or three great firms who work on scientific lines. I imagine that nine out of ten growers would be satisfied and would consider they had first-class quality seed supplied them if they get 100 per cent to germinate quite true to name, and probably such seeds from our present commercial standpoint are of first-class quality. But are they as good as can be produced? How few seed growers there are who do more than carefully rogue the crops when growing, pay attention to the proper cultivation, harvesting and drying, carefully cleaning the seeds from weeds and rubbish; perhaps in the case of peas and beans they only take out a few of the smallest. Certain it is that the larger the seed of any plant the better and stronger will be the growth and resulting crop, not forgetting also the highest standard of quality in color, shape, maturity and solidity. Of course, were a seedsman to make a practice of selecting his seeds in this manner, and supplying only those which showed an annually increasing high standard of quality on all the points mentioned, the question of expense would make the purchase of such seeds prohibitive to the ordinary users. And yet, would it? The best is always the cheapest and most economical, and therefore the most profitable. This applies more to seeds than to any other article of horticulture. Were seeds always selected to a higher standard each year the possibilities of improvement would be almost unlimited. If any one doubts these assertions (as the writer mentioned above remarks) let him get a pint of peas and a pint of beans and select from each the largest seeds in one-half and the smallest seeds in the other, not forgetting the solidity and weight per hundred seeds. Let him sow the four halves separate, and a yield of fully twenty-five per cent increase will be obtained from the two selected samples. The same thing will occur in a selection of smaller-seeded plants, such as radish, onion, etc. If the stock seeds of our seedsmen were annually obtained only from these annually selected seeds, improvement would continue, and crops of our market growers would be greatly improved thereby.

It appears from experience that the lower temperature a seed is grown in, in which it will properly mature and ripen its seed, the better and more vigorous it is when afterward grown in a warmer temperature. Consequently it should always be a practice of growers to procure their seeds grown as much as possible in a colder climate than that in which they are to be used. This method only applies to quite hardy subjects, such as annual flowers, etc., where they are not required to fully mature their crop, but produce little more than bloom. It is obvious that they must be grown in a warmer country than many in which they are used. B. J.

CARTER'S MONARCH STOCK.

A new and fine strain of ten-weeks stock is Carter's Monarch. Our trial proves that it comes into bloom particularly early, and the great length of spike favors a continuance of blossom for a long period. Its fragrance, which at any season is most refreshing and agreeable, fills the air during the early morning and evening. The immense size of individual pips, together with the unusual length of spike, makes a bed of these plants exceptionally effective, and certainly for the flower basket they possess considerable value in early summer. The seeds were sown in March, and seedlings planted out early in May provided a good display in June. Many visitors who have inspected them agree that the strain is an excellent one, the bold spikes, vigorous constitution of the plant, and purity of its color making an impression that will probably remain for some length of time. As with all other stocks, there is a proportion of single flowers, but the percentage is below the average. It would seem that the new Monarch is a glorified form of the now well known and popular Princess Alice, a favorite stock with everyone.—Gardeners' Chronicle.
